Nobles Close Session Here With Pageant, Night Parade

Thousands Line Avenue to See Wind-up of 61st Conclave.

Fireworks Show, Street Dance Held

Leonard Steuart, Capital Man, Is Installed as New Potentate.

By Gerald G. Gross.

Furnishing the climactic high light of Shrinedom's sixty-first annual conclave, a pageant taken from the leaves of history passed along Pennsylvania avenue last night to the accompaniment of the cheers of at least 100,000 spectators and the stirring notes of scores of uniformed bands.

Thousands of the spectacle worshipers had put up camp stools at favorite vantage points three, four and even five hours before the procession got under way. It seemed as though Wednesday night's fierce rain, which curtailed the parade of uniformed bodies, had sprouted myriads of new adherents to look upon the display last night which was to write finis to the Shriners' picturesque conclave.

The skies were fair, in contrast to the downpour of the previous night. Brilliant uniforms and radiant floats were exposed in their full glory, not concealed by rain capes or covered with tarpaulins, as they were on the previous night.

With a pyrotechnic exhibition and street dancing scheduled to follow immediately afterward, the pageant was the final event of a convention which brought 20,000 fez-topped merrymakers to Washington from Omaha and Bangor, Toronto and Houston. It glorified more than 1,200 performers.

Officers Installed.

Concluding its official business yesterday morning with the installation of newly elected officers, the Imperial Council devoted the remainder of the day to sightseeing, a river excursion to Quantico, band concerts, Army demonstrations and parties.

Leonard P. Steuart, Washington auto dealer, was installed as imperial potentate at ceremonies held in the National Theater. The 12 members of his Imperial Divan also were inducted into office. Memorial services were conducted for members who died within the past year.

Fifteen Shrine flags, one for each of the crippled children's hospitals maintained by the organization, were presented to the new imperial potentate by H. J. Klingler, president of the Pontiac Motor Car Co. Others who participated in the exercises, held at Fourteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue, were W. Freeland Kendrick, chairman of the hospital board of trustees; Robert P. Smith, potentate of Almas Temple and director of the 1935 convention, and Richard H. Grant, vice president of General Motors Corporation.

The flags will be distributed among the hospitals, but another gift presented to Mr. Stuart by General Motors is for his personal use. It is a high-powered automobile, wrapped in cellophane and unveiled in front of the speakers' stand while the Almas band played.

Registration headquarters at the Raleigh Hotel were open all day yesterday and last night, hundreds of nobles arriving on the last day of the convention. A final check-up has not yet been made, but it was announced, unofficially, that approximately 20,000 nobles, representing all 159 temples, "made their salaam to Uncle Sam."

80,000 Here All Told.

Official figures on total attendance probably will not be made known for several days, but it was estimated that the Capital's population increased by more than 80,000 during the conclave, taking into account the wives, children, friends and others who accompanied the Shriners here from 47 States, Hawaii, Mexico, Ontario and Newfoundland.

Delaware is the only State in the Union without a Shrine temple.

A good many of the visitors were expected to remain in Washington for vacation periods ranging from a few days to several weeks.

Braddock Beats Baer For Heavyweight Title

JAMES JAY BRADDOCK.

Challenger Scores Biggest Upset in Ring History by Outpointing Champion, 10-1 Choice; Max Claims Hands Were Broken.

By Bill McCormick.
A Staff Correspondent.

New York, June 13.—The greatest story in ring history was written tonight in the Long Island Bowl as James Jay Braddock, the lanky, hungry Irishman who was rescued from the New Jersey bread line to serve as a sacrifice to an inhuman, merciless, man-killing monster, battered his way to a well-deserved, 15-round decision which won him the heavyweight championship from Max Baer.

That the dethroned title holder was not an inhuman, merciless mankiller tonight detracts very little from the splendor of Braddock's performance. On the short end of odds ranging all the way from 5 to 10 to 1, Braddock fought not only a smart, heady fight, which completely nullified Baer's "killer in-

Arms Factory Blast Wrecks German Town

Toll of Lives May Reach 1,000 as Hundreds Are Injured.

Copyright, 1935, by the Associated Press.

Reinsdorf, Germany, June 13.—A series of thundering explosions virtually wiped out this munitions manufacturing village today, killing an estimated 100 to 1,000 persons.

Virtually every employe working in the great Westfalian Anhalt Explosive Works, which employs 13,000 persons, was believed injured. (The burgomaster of Reinsdorf estimated the deaths might reach 1,000. The propaganda ministry, however, placed the dead at first accounts at 22 and said the toll would not pass 100. Early in the evening the official German news agency reported 20 bodies had been recovered. It said "at least 50" were dead, 73 seriously injured and 300 slightly hurt.)

Flames raced through the stricken village tonight, their fury fed by the huge tanks of oil used by the munitions factories. Nazi authorities, fearing further catastrophes, ordered the entire village evacuated.

Search Flaming Wreckage.

The explosions, characterized by the burgomaster of this tiny town 52 miles southwest of Berlin, as "the greatest catastrophe in central Germany's history," rained blackened debris over the surrounding area.

Windows of buildings 15 miles away were shattered by their force, while an area estimated at 675 square miles was rocked.

Tonight long lines of stretcher bearers braved death in the flaming wreckage to bring out the dead and injured.

Automobiles, trucks, motorcycles, bicycles and horse-drawn vehicles jammed highways leading from Reinsdorf, carrying the victims to hospitals at Wittenberg, about an hour away.

A rigid censorship was imposed on the stricken area immediately after the first blast at 3 p. m. today. Hours afterward, so strict was the Nazi guard over the Reich's military secrets, it was still almost impossible to get accurate information.

Series of Blasts.

The first explosion, which wrecked the main sections of the Westfalen plants, was followed by another, still greater blast, at 3:30 p. m., which did further damage to the already nearly devastated town.

A series of minor explosions followed, and firemen, although they poured veritable rivers of water upon the inferno of the flames,

Selassie Ready To Yield Rule, Rome Reports

May Accept Protectorate; Anglo-French Permission Sought.

Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.

Rome, June 13.—Far-reaching concessions by Abyssinia to appease Italy's demands and check the threat of open warfare in East Africa were reported in authoritative quarters today.

Developments included:

1. Italy is ready to accept a "protectorate" over Abyssinia, retaining the present dynasty headed by Emperor Haile Selassie I.

2. Abyssinia is ready to cede to Italy the Province of Ogaden, to be joined to Italian Somaliland.

The United Press was informed on high authority that Premier Benito Mussolini's aspirations would be satisfied by obtaining full protectorate over Abyssinia. Such a course was regarded as practical if given France's and Great Britain's consent to alter the Anglo-French-Italian treaty of 1906, and with the acceptance of the Abyssinian Emperor.

Consulting Powers.

The authority indicated the Abyssinians have agreed to the concessions. Ogaden, in which the border town of Ualual is situated, was the scene of one of the numerous border clashes which stirred the present dispute.

Italy is consulting France and Britain through diplomatic channels to find some way of harmonizing Italian relations with the present treaty stipulations.

The principal treaty concerned is that of 1906, in which the three powers recognized the full independence of Abyssinia, but assigned to each other respective "zones of influence."

Britain always has guarded jealously her rights in the vicinity of Lake Thana, headwaters of the Blue Nile, essential for irrigation in the Sudan and Egypt. A formula is being sought to reconcile Britain's claims and Italian aspirations.

France's interest primarily is in the trade from central Abyssinia passing through her port of Djibouti, in French Somaliland, on the Red Sea.

50,000 Troops Ready.

Regarding reports Italy wants a concession through Abyssinia to construct a railroad linking Italian Somaliland with Eritrea, Italian colony to the north, on the Red Sea, it was emphasized Italy already possesses a treaty right to construct such a line.

Italian preparations for military emergencies are proceeding. Upward of 50,000 troops already are

Japan's Guns Near Peiping In New Push

Troops Advance South in Three Sectors From Great Wall.

Rumor is Tokyo Intends to Occupy Chahar Province.

Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.

Tientsin (Friday), June 14.—Japanese troops marched into north China on a new sector today, coincident with rumors Tokyo intended next to occupy Chahar Province, on the northwestern frontier.

The Japanese command confirmed reports that "a few hundred" troops from the garrison at Kupeikow, a strategic pass in the Great Wall, had pushed southward to Miyun, within 25 miles of Peiping.

Lieut. Col. T. Takahashi, military attache in Peiping, said the move was necessary because of "insufficient barracks" at Kupeikow.

This advance was in three sectors —Chahar in the northwest, Kupeikow on the Great Wall, and Shanhaikwan, where the wall reaches the sea.

Japanese troops "maneuvered" west of Dolonor, on the Chahar-Jehol provincial border. Japanese indicated the next demands would include ejection of Gen. Sung Che-Yuan as Governor of Chahar and his replacement by an official and troops agreeable to Tokyo.

On the Shanhaikwan front, Japanese detachments occupied the telegraph office.

Called Replacements.

The Japanese explained all the troop movements as "replacements."

Several Japaneses staff officers left Tientsin for Chinwantao, south of Shanhaikwan, as part of this renewed military activity.

British sources said they had official information that aside from Tokyo's demands covering their domination of Hopei Province, with which Nanking is complying, Japan already had submitted similar demands on Chahar Province—the gateway to Inner Mongolia.

The Central News Agency at Nanking reported: "According to reports, the Kwantung army again has presented new demands to the Peiping military authorities, and the central government (Nanking) is believed to be discussing the proper methods to cope with the new situation in north China."

War Minister Leaves.

Gen. Ho Ying-Ching, Nanking war minister, who was forced to bow to Japan's demands in Hopei, left Peiping for Nanking, and was not expected to return. His departure left north China without a single high Nanking authority to contest the inroads of the Japanese.

Foreshadowing complete Japanese control of the Tientsin-Peiping area, Gen. Ho prior to his departure ordered Gen. Shang Shen's title changed from garrison commander here to "safety preservation commander of Tientsin and Tangku (Tientsin's deep-water port)." Gen. Shang succeeded Gen. Yu Hsueh-Chung, ousted as Hopei governor by Japan.

Mayor Yuan Liang took over responsibility for peace and order in Peiping, instead of Gen. Wang Shu-Chang, garrison commander.

Rumors of Chinese rejections of Japan's present demands or fresh Tokyo demands were described as the "wildest sort of fabrication" by both Chinese and Japanese officials in Tientsin. The rumors originated from Nanking yesterday, after a meeting of the Central Political Council there.

Nanking said that "some mem-

Court Hears Of Lyddane Love Affair

'Googy' Carnell Reveals Story of Association With Beall.

Pair Went to Room With 'My Permission,' Says Former Bartender.

By Karl Schriftgiesser.
A Staff Correspondent.

Rockville, Md., June 13.—The love affair of Anne Lyddane with Arthur Beall, dapper Darnesville garage man, was dragged forth here today in a courtroom in which men and women stood four deep in the rear of crowded and coveted seats. It came from the lips of "Googy" Carnell, alleged contact man in the strange plot the State contends this willowy blonde woman was weaving against the life of her husband and Mrs. Beall.

The now famous "Googy" note had been read to the jury, which stopped chewing gum as the special prosecutor, John Oxley, impressed upon them the words of intrigue Anne Lyddane is said to have written to her alleged co-conspirator on a noiseless typewriter in the solitude of her bank office. Then State's Attorney Pugh, with no show of emotion, asked Carnell if Arthur Beall and Anne Lyddane had ever used his room.

"They went to my room in the Lincoln Inn with my permission," the former convict and one-time bartender said.

"What kind of a room?" asked Pugh.

"A bedroom," Carnell replied.

Defense Counsel Objects.

Pugh then asked regarding the condition of the room and what time of day the couple would go there.

Stedman Prescott, defense counsel, was on his feet, his naturally red face redder than ever.

"Why don't you just say they went to the room? Why go into this matter, anyway?" he protested.

Carnell spent almost four hours on the stand. For most of the time he wore a bored look as he sat there in his familiar double-breasted brown suit, tapping his fingers. He told the story which he must now know by heart of how Mrs. Lyddane asked him to get some one to kill her husband and Mrs. Beall. In her apartment, he said, Boland and she plotted while he went out into the kitchen to drink some gin. The trio were there 20 minutes, he said, and he had three drinks.

"I heard her say the best time to get 'Slom' (her husband) would be on March 26, his pay day," he said.

"She said she wanted Mrs. Beall and her husband put out of the way. 'What do you mean, bumped off?' I asked. 'Sure,' she said."

In his lengthy recital Carnell said that upon one occasion Anne Lyddane called him from in back of the bar. "She said 'that fellow' called," he said, adding that she declared "they had Slom all tied up." This was the first intimation that her husband had been kidnapped and that she paid $200 for his release.

Told of Kidnap Plot.

Later under cross-examination of Detective Sergeant James S. McAuliffe, of the Montgomery County police, it was brought out that Mrs. Lyddane, after her arrest, again told of a plot to kidnap her husband by two men in a car with Ohio license tags.

McAuliffe was rigorously questioned regarding the police treatment of Mrs. Lyddane and bristled

Clipper Ship Flies to Hawaii In Record Time Against Odds

Commercial Craft Makes Hop of 2,410 Miles in 18 Hours at "Loafing" Gait and Lays Over Before Finishing Trip to Midways.

By the United Press.

Honolulu, June 13.—Six courageous fliers, who dared midocean storms, paused in Hawaii tonight before pushing the huge four-motored Pan American Clipper on to Midway Islands.

The airmen purposely delayed their flight from California until bad weather was reported over the Pacific. They landed their big ship at Pearl Harbor 17 hours and 57 minutes after the take-off from San Francisco last night for a new record.

The flight log told of struggles with midocean squalls in an effort to test the fliers' ability to cope with all kinds of flying weather.

Capt. Edwin C. Musick, Pan American's ace pilot, and his crew will resume their westward journey some time Saturday, Airline officials said. All of the fliers have a previous round trip California-Hawaii flight to their credit.

The California to Hawaii leg is 2,410 miles and the remaining distance to the Midway Islands terminal on a sandy atoll in the South Seas is 1,380 miles.

Musick believed that this second westward flight proved that mail and passenger service could be started soon. Midway Islands will be the second westbound stop in the Pan-American Airways proposed service to the Orient.

He revealed that the clipper ship could have beaten its new record by another hour if speed had been the crew's object.

"We explored different altitudes," he explained. "Clouds made instrument flying necessary about half the distance. We deliberately sought out storm areas which transport planes would have avoided in order to continue our explorations of all phases of atmospheric conditions."

The plane carried enough gasoline in her tanks upon arrival for an additional 800 miles. The crew worked in three shifts which permitted all to sleep.

Average speed for the flight was 136.4 miles per hour, which clipped 42 minutes from the record east-west flight of April 16-17. Musick was chewing gum when he stepped from the plane at the end of the flight. There were less than 30 spectators.

House to Extend NRA Under Gag Rule Today; Long's Filibuster Fails

Exhausted After NRA Filibuster

Roosevelt's Intervention Assures Action as Deadline Nears.

President Demands End of Loitering

Insists Upon Passage of Full Legislative Program.

By Robert C. Albright.

Salvaged from complete wreckage by a supreme Senate effort, an obedient House and the personal intervention of the President, the cropped eagle that was NRA is expected to complete its delayed flight through Congress today.

The route to final passage, two days ahead of NRA's June 16 deadline, was safely beaconed late yesterday by a rigid House rule, limiting all debate today on the Senate extension resolution to one hour.

Senator Huey Long's ostentatious filibuster to kill NRA had collapsed with the dawn. While Senators passed most of the day sleeping off the effects of Wednesday night's oratorical orgy, the House gathered up loose NRA strands and prepared to tie them together.

Success within grasp on the focal issue, the Administration planned to follow up the coup with a renewed drive for enactment of the entire Roosevelt program. Social security, the AAA amendments, the Wagner labor bill, the Guffey coal measure and the holding company bill will lead the parade.

Legislative Developments.

Legislative highlights were:

The President told House leaders he wanted the Senate's Section 11 (death sentence proviso) kept in the Wheeler-Rayburn utility holding company bill.

The social security program, already past the House, was made the Senate's unfinished business, to be taken up immediately on the Senate's convening today.

Last minute efforts were exerted to save a half dozen agencies scheduled otherwise to expire June 16, including the Federal Alcohol Control Administration, the Railway Coordinator's office, and the Central Statistical board.

Plainly told by the President that he wants no further loitering, House leaders attempted to rush through the limited NRA extension yesterday, following ignominious crushing of Huey Long's 15½-hour filibuster to kill the Blue Eagle.

A lone objection by Representative Robert F. Rich (Republican), Pennsylvania, balked immediate House action.

House Gag Planned.

Chairman John J. O'Connor of the House Rules committee immediately called that group together and reported out a rule that with normal Democratic support will insure passage today in less than an hour.

Irritated at the Senate's filibuster and efforts to invoke Senate patronage control, O'Connor earlier yesterday had indicated he would make no move to save NRA. The White House speedily arranged a conference with leaders, however, and a seemingly threatening situation was smoothing over.

Recognizing the futility of battling the measure further, even House Minority Leader Bertrand Snell had agreed to let the resolution come up for action yesterday.

He told the House:

"I well appreciate the fact that by a technical objection, I could delay the bill by a few hours. If I had any chance of defeating the measure, I would object. We on this side of the aisle have always been opposed to NRA, and the Supreme Court's decision confirmed that belief."

Delays Action.

It looked like a quick agreement would be reached, when Representative Rich arose. The Senate, he said, had spent all the previous night on the bill, yet the House, he

Hopkins Calls State Aids Here; Governors Irked by Relief Setup

40 Administrators Meet Monday to Start Works Program.

By Felix Bruner.

Works relief administrators from more than 40 States will meet in Washington Monday for the purpose of starting the new $4,000,000,000 program, which in the last few weeks has been transformed from its original aspects to something closely resembling the old CWA.

Harry L. Hopkins, works progress administrator, who called the meeting, predicted that by the middle of July a "substantial number" of persons would be at work under the program. The most of these, it is believed, will continue to do "made work" they are doing now under direction of the FERA. The difference will be that they will be under direction of the works administration.

Meanwhile, Secretary Ickes indicated that PWA projects, with the exception of housing and those financed by partial grants to cities would be virtually prohibited by the rule that the cost of works relife projects must average not more than $1,140 per man per year.

Housing Work Excepted.

In answer to a question as to what kind of work could be done under the specified limitation Ickes said that "building of any substantial projects in which steel, brick, cement or stone are used would be very difficult." It has been indicated that this difficulty will not apply to housing, where an exception has been made.

Ickes said that there already had been "some difficulty" in qualifying PWA projects under the limitation. He added that many projects could be qualified on a basis of a 45 per cent grant to cities which would finance the remainder of the cost with private loans. It was learned from other sources, however, that very few applications on this basis have been made and that few are contemplated.

In connection with PWA it was also revealed that thousands of men who are now employed on these projects may find themselves without jobs as the projects are completed. Hopkins said that no provision had been made to prevent the creation of this new army of the unemployed, who will not be eligible for work relief jobs under President Roosevelt's order that only persons on relief rolls in May will be given employment.

Ickes was asked directly at his press conference whether the new program were not "another CWA."

"Let's go on to the next question," was his only answer.

No New Projects.

Ickes at his conference also repeated his previous statement that no reclamation projects, other than those already under way, could be undertaken under the works program.

Ickes and Hopkins differ on this subject, as they apparently differ on most things connected with the works program. Hopkins said that "of course" there would be reclamation projects. He emphasized the fact that the average cost per man per year for wages and materials must be $1,140, but he said that high cost projects could be balanced by low cost work.

"Obviously," he said, "you can't put 3,500,000 men to work on Tri-

Cry Soup Ladling When Told U. S. Appointees Will Handle Funds.

By Raymond Clapper,
A Staff Correspondent.

Biloxi, Miss., June 13.—The Governors' Conference was thrown into sharp controversy when word was brought direct from Washington today by Aubrey Williams, assistant to Federal Relief Administrator Hopkins, that in the new works program the machinery will operate entirely under Federal control without any legal participation by the Governors.

Williams outlined the policy which is to govern the works program, making it plain that contrary to the practice under FERA, the set-up and distribution of funds will be entirely through Federally appointed officials.

Although legally the Governors will have no part in the functioning of this machinery, Williams said that the Federal Government hoped to work in harmony with them and to have their cooperation.

Nice Will Speak.

Already in a rebellious mood over the constitutional issue raised by the Supreme Court's NRA decision, several Governors joined in firing critical questions at Williams. There were references to "soup ladlers," to putting relief on a patronage basis dictated by Senators and Representatives like postoffice jobs, and to robbing the Governors of their last vestige of dignity. At least four Governors said later that they intended to discuss this matter more fully at tomorrow's sessions.

Gov. Nice of Maryland, one of the two Republican Governors present at the conference, said he will speak tomorrow on the general subject of encroachment on the States.

"No possible emergency," he said tonight after hearing the address of Williams, "can justify the philosophy which has been injected into our National Government of scrapping the States and filling the land with Federal agents. The problem confronting us is to correct the error of the first instance, the error of attempting to do illegally that which, to a large exent, can and should be done legally, that is, by the States themselves."

Peery Talks on NRA.

More detailed discussion of what the States should do about preserving desirable features of NRA and the question of devising State compacts is to take place tomorrow. Several speakers introduced these subjects at today's session.

One of the first to bring the matter up was Gov. George C. Peery of Virginia, who on behalf of the visiting Governors responded to the address of welcome by Gov. Sennett Conner of Mississippi, host to the conference.

"The passing of the NRA by virtue of the recent decision of the Supreme Court brings to this conference new questions of great significance and momentous import," Gov. Peery said. "A brief though stormy and heroic existence has brought some good. It is significant that some who wholeheartedly berated all of its provisions now seek to salvage some of its admittedly good aspects. But the court of last resort has spoken in a unanimous opinion. So long as we have a Federal Constitution, the path of

Grass Rooters Cause Farley One Big Laugh

Democratic Chief Turns Sarcastic in Answer to Republicans.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

The answer of the Roosevelt Administration to the Midwestern Republican "grass roots" convention, given by genial, smiling Postmaster James A. Farley in his capacity as chairman of the Democratic National Committee, was a loud, derisive laugh.

In the first notice the Administration has taken of the Republican meeting, Mr. Farley sought to belittle it, sarcastically asked why the conclave was silent about former President Herbert Hoover, and contended that such Republican Old Guards as Frank L. Smith dominated the convention in order to keep down the party's progressive element.

The Democratic strategy for the present is to keep all Republican efforts closely identified with Mr. Hoover in the belief that the former President is one of the best political assets the Democratic Party possesses. The Republicans after 1928 used Alfred E. Smith in much the same manner—as a red flag to infuriate a large body of Democrats.

At the same time, there are several influential and usually shrewd Democrats here who profess to be convinced that Mr. Hoover will be the next Republican nominee. One on Capitol Hill, known as a canny political prognosticator, privately is offering two-to-one odds it will be Mr. Hoover.

Hoover Motives Assayed.

The belief that Mr. Hoover will be successful at next year's Republican convention is based on the theory that he is the only outstanding Republican who is willing to make a bruising fight to get the nomination. The former President's activities of the last few months, particularly the manner in which he injected himself into the Midwestern conference, is held to be evidence indicating Mr. Hoover's desire to be renominated.

The Democrats, holding this belief contend that Mr. Hoover visualizes himself as a second Grover Cleveland, who was renominated and reelected after suffering defeat at the end of his first term. Moreover, it is contended that Mr. Hoover feels he was a victim of hysteria developed by the depression and that he should be given an opportunity to vindicate himself.

Many of former Hoover appointees are in control of the Republican organization, especially in the Southern States. These men, it is contended, feel some obligation to the former President and unless someone else sharply challenges him, they will support him. Due to the Roosevelt popularity, the Democratic chieftains regard the Republican nomination as not very valuable and for that reason argue that few men will make any hard fight or spend any large sum of money to get it.

Many of President Roosevelt's close advisers believe the renomination of Mr. Hoover would make certain the former's reelection next year, contending that naming the former President would widen the split in Republican ranks and serve to drive the Republican progressives closer to Mr. Roosevelt.

Whether the wish is the father of such thoughts or not, it is clear that directors of Democratic strategy are eager to indentify Mr. Hoover with every step taken by the Republicans. This Mr. Farley did yesterday in a formal statement regarding the Springfield meeting issued through the Democratic National Committee.

Postmaster General Ironic.

The Postmaster General, who spent several hours conferring Wednesday with the President, asserted he was "somewhat shocked that so representative a gathering—representative, I mean, of the confusion and irreconcilable character of its composition—should have failed to mention the name of their last President and their last standard bearer."

"I do not know whether this was because they were ashamed of him or because they were afraid of promoting a gale of laughter," he added. "I do not recall in all my political experience a parallel omission at such a convention.

"Possibly," he added, "it may be explained by the presence at a 'grass roots' convention, of such an eminent farmer as Frank L. Smith, who farmed the Insull pocketbook so successfully that he was cast out of the Senate because his campaign was financed by the then czar of the public utility business when Smith himself was chairman of the commission appointed to protect Illinois from the exploitation of the Insulls, to mention only one of the G. O. P. Old Guard that took charge of the affair, in order to make sure that there should be no unseemly prominence attained by any of the progressive element of the Republican organization.

Farley Wants Clarity.

"Their rooting in the grass did not seem to turn up much more than a denunciation of the New Deal and a presentation as Republican principles of pretty much every process and policy identified with the New Deal. The same platform could have been written with much more clarity and brevity.

"It should read: 'We are in favor of the New Deal, but we think we ought to have the job of administering it.'"

Mr. Farley contended the Springfield meeting did not achieve more than abuse of the President and that hardly a regional gathering is necessary for the Republican party to arraign a Democratic President.

Governors Receive New Blow; U. S. to Handle Works Cash; Is Relief a Federal Function?

By Raymond Clapper

BILOXI, Miss., June 13.—Governors here attending their twenty-seventh annual conference were somewhat startled to discover that in the midst of the uproar over the invasion of States' rights which was provoked by President Roosevelt's dissent from the Supreme Court Schechter decision, a still further encroachment is being put into effect through the new works program.

This bad news was delivered quite frankly and bluntly, although with a smile, by Aubrey Williams, tall, thin, tense young social worker assistant to Harry Hopkins, at Washington.

After Mr. Williams finished explaining how the new works setup would operate, the Governors discovered the one prerogative which they had been left under FERA—that of signing checks for relief funds—is to be taken away from them. They have been aware that during the last two years of Federal relief, their function has become more and more nominal. The signing of the checks for the disbursement of money forwarded in lump sum from the Washington relief headquarters of Harry Hopkins was the one remaining gesture of authority left to them. They clung to it as a dying family clings to its heirlooms.

Now just as they are warming up to reassert the rights temporarily taken from them under the NRA, young Mr. Williams tells them that under the law they must stand back on the side lines while Washington pours out its $4,000,000,000 works relief fund. Oh, yes, as a matter of common sense the Federal Government wants the cooperation of the Governors and hopes to consult them. But that is entirely at the discretion of Washington, not of the Governors. In some instances already the Governors have been made keenly aware that where their Senators at Washington are hostile to them and happen to have the ear of the Administration, the Governor must take what he gets and like it.

What is most humiliating to them is that they must have the Federal money to care for their unemployed. It will do them no good to stand up and insist on their rights to run affairs within their respective States because their affairs won't run at all unless the Federal Government supplies the dollar power. That is what hurts. It is what makes their rebellion at Mr. Roosevelt's proposal to give the Federal Government more power slightly ridiculous. They build up a strong case in theory but when it comes down to the matter of cash the theory caves in and the States are revealed as unable to meet their own internal problems in such an elemental thing as seeing that their own citizens don't starve.

Had the States been able to feed their own and give them work, their argument against giving the Federal Government more power to deal with economic and social problems would have greater force. In this one basic function it is demonstrated that certain matters which are theoretically strictly the internal affair of a State, must, as a practical matter, be handled by the Federal Government.

The Governors wish that the Federal Government, while supplying the cash, would leave to them the matter of saying how it should be spent. There are arguments to be made in favor of that as a more practical method.

But the Federal authorities, acting under the directions in the works relief act, have decided to handle the money and supervise its expenditure as a strictly Federal operation.

If anyone wanted to start a lawsuit about it, would the Supreme Court hold, after the precedent in the Schechter case, that the feeding of a destitute family down here in Wiggins, Miss., is not a Federal function? Would it hold that the buying of groceries for such a family, or finding a job for the husband and father digging a sewer line, is no more interstate commerce than mining, manufacturing, or the growing of crops?

Is it constitutional to tax some struggling business man in New York City to buy shoes for a tenant farmer on the banks of the Yazoo River?

The court has held that the Federal Government can not prohibit children from working either through its interstate commerce powers or by using its taxing power. Can it take someone else's money to feed the parents of these children?

Perhaps the lawyers can answer these questions without even going to the Supreme Court about it. That's the trouble with laymen. When they try to think in terms of ordinary common sense, the lawyers come along and make them look silly.

A hotel proprietor here offered a job to a young fellow who was on work relief.

"I'd like to work for you, Mister," the young man explained, "but the relief man has been awful good to me and he might not like it if I quit him."

Hoover Impressed With Conference

By the United Press.

Chicago, June 13.—The Grass Roots conference of midwest Republicans was described by Herbert Hoover today as showing 'the surge of the American people to real Americanism."

The former President visited his friend, Arch W. Shaw, between trains on his way from New York to his home at Palo Alto, Cal.

"The midwest conference," he said, "was a constructive expression of the Republican policies and spirit. But more than that it showed the surge of the American people to real Americanism."

He declined specific comment on the conference's adoption of ten principles recommended for the party's 1936 national convention, but made a pun in reference to Senator Huey Long's 15½ hour filibuster in the Senate.

"That's a long job," he said, smiling.

Man Sues Railroad For Damage to Car

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Danville, Va., June 13.—C. H. Hudson, whose auto was demolished by a Southern Railway train at the Stacey grade crossing near here on May 2, has filed suit against the company in Greensboro, N. C., for recovery of $102, which he asserts was the fair market value of his car. He claims that the crossing was so muddy that the wheels of his car sank, making it impossible to move the car before a passenger train struck it. He claims that the company was negligent in not keeping the crossing in proper order.

Kansas City, June 13 (AP).—James M. Wright bought a four-room bungalow and started looking for a new location.

Officer Pleads Cadet Wedding Was Not Legal

Sebastian Defends Course at West Point Before Court Martial.

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 13.—Lieut. Henry A. Sebastian, former West Point football star, admitted through his counsel to a court-martial today that he had married a revue dancer while still a cadet, but pleaded he believed the ceremony illegal and void because he had used a false name.

The court adjourned without a finding, referring the decision to Gen. Lucius T. Holbrook, commander of the First Division.

Reduction in promotion files or dismissal from the Army are possible punishments if Sebastian is convicted.

The husky Army officer was ordered before the courtmartial at Fort Jay after his wife, the former Harriet Hagman, sued him for separation, charging he beat her after an Army Day party at Governor's Island.

Remarried in Church.

She disclosed they had been married in a ceremony at Brooklyn in 1931. On his graduation in 1934 they were remarried in a church ceremony at Newburgh, N. Y., his mother a witness.

West Point cadets are forbidden to have a wife, and after each leave are required to sign a certificate they were not married.

Sebastian's counsel admitted the youth had signed the certificate, but contended the Government had to prove he had done so with intent wilfully to deceive.

Benjamin R. Newcomb, a Brooklyn patent attorney, testified that to a hypothetical question posed to him by Sebastian, and without knowing Sebastian was involved, he had advised the officer such a ceremony was illegal.

Picture On Billboard.

A deposition from Sebastian's mother said she first learned of Miss Hagman in 1931 when her son showed her the picture of a girl on a billboard and told her "that's the girl I'm going to marry."

In 1932 she was introduced to Miss Hagman by her son at a football game. He called the model "my fiancee." At her urging they made the Newburgh ceremony a church wedding which she attended.

Defense counsel, in his closing plea, said the court martial was the first involving an Army officer for an offense alleged to have been committed in his cadet days. He said he believed the Government had not proved Sebastian "morally unfit" to bear arms for the United States.

Thought Wedding Illegal.

Maj. Robert H. Alcott, trial judge advocate, argued that the use of the false name in the ceremony proved intent to deceive. He criticized the officer's advisers.

Sebastian declined to speak when called on.

Capt. Albert Williams and Maj. William D. Weaver, of the 16th Infantry, Fort Jay, testified Sebastian voluntarily had told them last April of the Brooklyn ceremony.

They agreed in their testimony that Sebastian expressed a belief he was illegally married because he had used the name "Donald Moss" and had given his age as 21. He was 20 in 1931.

Maj. Weaver quoted Sebastian as saying the couple had "lived together as man and wife for several days after the ceremony but my legal knowledge was limited and I thought I was not legally married."

Virginia Boy Finds An Unusual Relic

Stone Resembles Shells Used in World War.

Big Laurel, Va., June 13.—While playing in a newly plowed field near his home on Guest River, Earl D. Bolling, 7-year-old son of Hillard Bolling, found one of the strangest tools ever in this section.

It is about 12 inches long and 3 inches in diameter, and resembles one of the shells brought back from France by members of the A. E. F. It has been polished until it is as smooth as glass and tapers to almost a needlepoint on one end, while the other is cut square across, or it may have been broken.

The stone was found near the mouth of Rocky Fork, close to the spot where Benjamin Bolling built the second cabin ever erected within the bounds of the present Wise County. It is about a mile south of the old Indian fort, traces of which can still be seen, on a knoll overlooking a bottom which, tradition says, the Cherokees once used as a temporary town when they visited this section to hunt.

The relic has been deposited in the museum which James Taylor Adams is collecting here.

Rumor Is Tokyo Intends to Occupy Chahar Province.

bers" of the council personally favored resistance and some of the Left Wing bloc even suggested cultivating Soviet Russia as an ally, but left the decision of policy entirely to Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek. He has agreed to all the demands so far, and may be expected to do so in future to avoid actual warfare with the Japanese in North China, while he is busy in the west fighting Chinese Communists.

Col. Takatatsi, at Peiping, issued the following statement: "The Japanese have not handed any ultimatum to Nanking—but neither have we received any written reply to previous oral suggestions." This was interpreted to mean the Japanese might press for a formal written agreement.

Gen. Chin Teh-Chun, Chinese commander in Chahar, who held four Japanese secret service men for several hours earlier in the week, precipitating the trouble in that direction, told Chinese correspondents he called on Col. Takahashi in Peiping and apologized for the incident. He said Takahashi replied "I'm sorry—you're too late."

Japanese "replacements" in the Tientsin zone, it was said, would take over the duties immediately, including policing Shanhaikwan and that unless some other incident occurred the old troops were scheduled to sail from Chinwangtao, 140 miles north, for home on June 18.

Keep Foreign Powers In Close Touch

Nanking, June 13 (U.P.).—The national government foreign office, perturbed by rumors of Japan's intentions next to move on Chahar Province, today kept foreign powers in close touch with this situation.

The central political council's extraordinary session, convened because of the North China crisis, continued discussions of the Japanese activities, but was understood to have reached no new conclusions.

The government was expected to continue to refrain from any official statements whatever indicative of resistance or acceptance, at least until Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek replies to telegrams.

Well-informed observers doubt the council's telegrams or Gen. Chiang's reply would alter the situation fundamentally.

A few members were reported to have expressed personal preference for resistance rather than suffer the latest "humiliation" in the north, but the council remained silent.

Mere discussion of the possibility of resistance made the capital more tense tonight, although the majority of officials apparently still consider military resistance to the powerful Japanese forces foolhardy.

It was believed here Gen. Chiang considers suppression of the rising Chinese Communist movement demands primary attention at the moment.

The Jury Hearing Lyddane Case

Harris & Ewing.

The jury of farmers and townsmen trying Anne Lyddane on charges of conspiracy to murder her husband, leaves Rockville Courthouse for dinner. The court held a session yesterday.

AnneLyddane's Link With Beall Bared in Court

'Googy' Tells of CoupleGoing to His Room With 'My Permission.'

when it was suggested that he told her to shut up. Questioned by him regarding the plot, McAuliffe quoted her as saying:

"I have kept my husband for the last five years and I love him."

Gangland witnesses again were paraded across the witness stand. First there was nervous, shifty-eyed "Googy" Carnell, who stood the brunt of Prescott's fiery cross-examination. Next came Harry Elmer Thomas, former inmate of Lorton Reformatory, where he served a sentence for housebreaking. In a low, almost inaudible voice, he recounted his testimony as given in the recent Boland trial wherein he said he told "Gambler Jack" Boland that he would be crazy if he went in with Anne Lyddane in a murder plot.

Thomas told of the plot to rob the bank after the murders with a smoke-screen car and by use of keys which Mrs. Lyddane was to furnish. He denied making statements that were attributed to him in the preliminary hearings and testified that the $200 received from Anne Lyddane were supposed to have come from her safe deposit vault.

Signed False Statement.

He testified that he had signed a false statement because Kenneth Lyddane, who wrote the statement and who is of defense counsel, offered him immunity. He admitted that although he was questioned almost consistently for two days and a night he kept denying he knew Anne Lyddane.

"You didn't say you knew her until you were promised immunity by the State, did you?" shouted Prescott.

"That's right," he said.

He denied ever intending to kill anyone.

"You'd take money and never give Carnell a cent? You'd even double-cross Carnell?"

"Sure," said Thomas.

Cross-examination of the various witnesses revealed that their stories as to whether Anne Lyddane wanted Mrs. Beall or her husband killed first did not jibe.

Next of the underworld characters was Irving Frank (Oppity Bop) Borell, who said Carnell had given him that strange and unexplained nickname while both were serving time at Lorton. He told of bringing Thomas to Rockville, seeing him talk with a woman who looked like the defendant. While he was being cross-examined in an effort to show that his memory was faulty Stedman Prescott startled the court by shouting to States Attorney Pugh:

"I know you're doing it unconsciously, but you shouldn't shake your head at the witness."

Willie Brown's Story.

Then out of the Washington bad lands stepped Willie Brown, who now lives in Alexandria, but who once lived in a Pennsylvania penitentiary for holding up seven Federal agents and stealing their liquor.

Cool, collected, tough—he sat there unmoved by the fire of questions hurled his way.

He told of being picked by "Gambler Jack" Boland as trigger man in the conspiracy; of warning Boland that he would be crazy to go through with it, and of how Boland then said, "I'm not going to go through with it. I'm only going to shake her down."

Brown was not shaken by defense cross-examination, insisting that it was not until he had mentioned the electric chair to Boland that the gambler mentioned "shaking down" Anne Lyddane.

Asked by Prescott if, when first arrested, the hoodlum squad" officer who made the arrest was a man named Barrett, notorious for "breaking fellow's cardrums," he said:

"The same Barrett," fairly spitting his contempt.

Banker Another Witness.

He said of Carnell upon his appearance in a Washington lunchroom:

"The man was drunk, talking at the top of his voice about wanting some one to clip a woman in Rockville."

Richard F. Green, president of the Farmers Bank & Trust Co., and former employer of Anne Lyddane, another witness, denied with a laugh that he had written the "Googy" note. He said there were only six keys to the bank before the door lock was changed when Mr. Pugh warned him of the intended bank robbery, and that he thought there was only one noiseless typewriter there—Anne's.

Detective Takes Stand.

First of the witnesses to take the stand in the stifling courtroom as the evening session got under way was Detective Sergt. Joseph B. Nolte, who testified to following Anne Lyddane to Annapolis the night before the police stepped in to break up the alleged conspiracy. Under cross-examination he said her husband was with her and that they "were getting along fine."

Dignified and pudgy, Bert C. Farrer, examiner of documents for the United States Treasury Department, waves were wafted about him by next mounted the stand as the heat the two fine electric fans. He denied he was a "doctor" as counsel insisted upon call him; proudly said he had testified in 36 States.

Pearing through spectacles like an absent-minded professor, yet never neglecting to look up at the jury when he had a point to make, he said in his opinion the original "Googy" note and the comparative copy were made on the same machine, namely Anne's. He based his conclusions, he said, on nine points of similarity. As he passed photographic copies of the notes and ward from the note to the jury, three placed glasses on their neses, examined them closely, the others scanned them seemingly with great interest.

His total bill to the State, he said under cross-examination, amounted to $480. Evidently the wood expert of the Lindbergh case has impressed widely, for everyone in the courthouse hung on his words, and the jury missed not a syllable.

Anne Lyddane in Black.

Anne Lyddane, again in a black dress trimmed becomingly in white and with a black straw hat which sported a small veil, was as interested as anyone and frequently made conversations to her counsel. Once when Attorney Prescott said she had been a stenographer for 14 years she corrected him. It was 11, she said audibly. The jury smiled.

While "Dr." Farar was testifying, three photographers, one from the Herald, one from the Himes, Washington publications, and one from the New York Daily News, were arrested for violation of a court edict barring cameras from the third floor. They were taking posed flashlights of Mrs. Josephine Beall, and at recess all were taken before the three judges, where they were svrly reprimanded and the plates confiscated by the court.

Mrs. Beall wept after the reprimand and nearly broke down. With her at the time the pictures were taken was a stenographer from State's Attorney Pugh's office.

The photographers were Albert Candido, Washington Times; G. E. Tankdersly, Washington Herald, and W. Hoff, New York Daily News. The detention of the photographers interrupted the trial for fully 35 minutes. Miss Eleanor Howard was the stenographer who was with Mrs. Beall when the sheriff interrupted the photography.

Photographer Is Witness.

Ira Gullicksen, Washington police photgrapher and spare-time typewriter expert, who never testified on typewriters until the Boland trial this week, took the stand afterward.

"Were you in conference with Farrar since he testified?" asked Prescott in a terrifying voice.

"Yes," he replied, "Farrar said it was hot in there."

Rigorous cross-examination failed t oshake his belief that both notes were composed on the same machine, but Prescott shook him in his knowledge of the blow systems of typewriters, a subjet the expert professed he knew nothing about. He finished his testimony at 10:30 and court was recessed until 9:30 a. m. tomorrow.

More than 500 persons attempted to crowd their way into the court during the evening. Women predominated, but one man appeared and stood in the jam at the rear, a sleeping 2-year-old in his arms.

School Board Includes Item in Budget Sent to Commissioners.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Westminster, Md., June 13.—It was learned today that the Carroll County Board of Education, in the budget approved this week, has included a request for $6,000 to restore a part of the teachers' salary bonus cut made in 1932.

According to a report made by the school board additions to present salary schedules will be made on a percentage basis, if the appropriation is approved by the county commissioners.

The board also announced approval of a plan to make a request for Carroll County's share of the Federal Emergency Education funds. A portion of these funds, it was stated, will be used by the acting welfare board of the Children's Aid Society.

Other announcements made by the board included approval of a trophy to be purchased for the winner of the annual school athletic meet, special appointments and acceptance of resignations.

Appointments made were: Music instructor, named to assist Philip Royer, present county instructor, Paul Crouse, jr.; clerical assistants, Ruby R. Spencer, clerk; Elise Hobbs, stenographer; Charles O. Clemson, attorney; Roland Haifley, service man; Truman Cash, insurance supervisor.

Resignations were announced as follows: Helen B. Reier, Hampstead Elementary School; Hilda Shipley, Hampstead High School; Margaret Lockard, Westminster Elementary School; Ellen S. Foutz, Westminster High School; Carl E. Walsh, Shiloh School; Doris Cooper, Finksburg School; Ruth Yingling, Sykesville High School; Helen Talley, New Windsor High School.

Rome, June 13.—The Government Press Bureau expelled David Darrah, Rome correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, and banned entrance into the country of copies of the New York Times.

Darrah was not even given time to communicate with friends, four detectives who went to his home requiring him and his wife to pack and leave immediately. The detectives accompanied them to the station.

The expulsion was attributed to writing of alleged anti-Italian articles, criticizing the financial structure of the country and the allegiance of the people to the Fascist regime.

Darrah was the fourth foreign correspondent to be expelled since March, and the Foreign Press Association took the matter under advisement.

The Times was barred for an unspecified period as a result of an editorial, "Baldwin and Mussolini," printed after recent speeches by Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin of Great Britain and Premier Mussolini of Italy.

Arlington Acts Today on Bids To Repair Court

Building Will be Enlarged; Candidate Addresses People 'as Jury.'

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Clar. 500. Clarendon, Va.

With bids for the proposed additions to the county courthouse having been opened by County Manager R. Y. Braden and the architects, Upman & Adams, of Washington, the county board will consider their recommendations at its meeting today.

Plans call for the erection of another floor over the present office of the county clerk and for a 68-foot extension on the east side of the structure.

The first floor of the extension will house the offices of the clerk, treasurer and commissioner of revenue. On the second floor will be offices for the Commonwealth's attorney, county manager, engineer, sewer, water and auditing departments, Circuit Court judge and the health and welfare departments.

Surplus out of this year's revenue will be used to finance initial construction costs. No additional taxes will be levied for the building.

Among other matters to come to the board's attention will be consideration of an ordinance to prohibit the sale of fireworks in Arlington County and the agreement with the town council of Falls Church for the installation of the county's sewer system within the limits of the town.

John Paul Jones, the first of the three candidates seeking the Democratic nomination for Commonwealth's attorney for Arlington County in the primary to be held August 6, introduced a novel method of campaigning when he addressed a mass meeting at Clarendon Wednesday night.

Taking the floor, Mr. Jones said, "Ladies and gentlemen, I consider you the jury hearing the case of John Paul Jones, plaintiff, against Lawrence W. Douglas, defendant, for the office of Commonwealth's attorney.

"The law is very plain as to the duties of the officer holding this office and my one promise to you is that if elected I will be the Commonwealth's attorney and will try the county's cases."

Emery N. Hosmer, the next speaker, said: "I, some weeks ago, raised the first issue in this campaign when I said I was opposed to Arlington County being made a dump and demanded that the ordinance be enforced. After a fight of nearly ten years we now see the dumps in the county closed."

He said further, if elected, he would see that the laws are enforced wtihout fear or favor.

Douglas, in defending his administration, asked the audience to look at the records at the courthouse.

"The records will speak for themselves," he said.

"During my term of office I have filed suits and collected a total of $365,000, without any additional cost to the county.

"If reelected, as I expect to be, I can only say I will do the best I can, as I always have done, to protect the interests of the citizens of Arlington County."

Among other speakers were John W. Rust, incumbent; Hugh Reid and L. C. Painter, candidates for the State Senate; Harry K. Green, candidates for commissioner of revenue; William D. Medley, candidate for the General Assembly, and Walter U. Varney, candidate for county judge, all of whom are unopposed.

Charles R. Fenwick, of Falls Church, chairman of the Democratic executive committee, presided.

Because of a typographical error it was inadvertently reported yesterday morning that Eugene Cassey, jr., son of Capt. Eugene Cassey, U. S. A., of 2000 Glebe road, Arlington County, had been judged the winner in the State final essay contest sponsored by the better housing campaign.

Eugene Caffey, son of Capt. Eugene Caffey, U. S. A., was the winner. He will represent the State in the national semi-finals in Washington.

Work on the remodeling of the building recently purchased by the Clarendon Citizens Association has been started, under the direction of Arthur J. Porter, of Clarendon.

It is expeteed that the building will be ready for the holding of meetings early in September.

Arms Factory Blast Destroys German Town were fearful the blaze would extend to other dynamite and munitions factories here.

Hastily summoned Reichswehr (regular army), Nazy Storm Troops, picked Blackshirt Guards, regular police and labor service units were deployed immediately around the blazing works.

Gas masks were issued to them to enable them to withstand the fumes pouring from the ruins.

The guards had their hands full turning back frantic wives and children of workers, who fought to reach the site of the disaster. Heartbreaking scenes were enacted as the soldiers strove to impose some semblance of discipline upon the terrified inhabitants of this little village of 7,500.

Secret police immediately began an investigation. It was not believed, however, that any official explanation of the explosion would be forthcoming for many days. Newspapers in the district were ordered to publish no word of the disaster pending the official news bureau's statement.

As urgent orders went out to every relief agency in the area, physicians from the entire district and detachments of Red Cross nurses braved the flames to rush into the ruins and care for the dying and injured.

Almost every building left standing in the town, which resembled a battlefield, was hastily converted into a first aid dressing station or emergency hospital.

Relief work was hampered by thousands of curious who flocked to the scene of the disaster. Soldiers and police had difficulty turning them back.

The explosion was regarded as likely to hamper seriously the Nazis' drive to rearm the Reich. They have encouraged plants in this industrial area in line with Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler's plans for the military "regeneration" of the nation.

Smoke Hampers Rescuers.

So tremendous was the force of the first blast, which occurred while the huge explosives and chemical factory—exceeded in size in Germany only by the I-G Farben Dye Trust—was working at full shift, that some workers were thrown out through windows.

The wreckage of the town was such as might have been caused by an earthquake. Buildings were shattered to debris. Roofs shaken off collapsed in front of walls still standing.

The fire that followed added to the horror and some of the bodies brought from the blazing ruins were burned beyond recognition.

A thick, black, heavy pall of smoke hung over the nearly deserted village this evening, almost obscuring the red fury of the flames and making it difficult for rescue workers to breathe.

The Westfalen plant made explosives, dynamite, chemicals and munitions. Authorities refused to say, however, whether its primary purpose was to make munitions for the increased army.

Maverick Resents Admiral's Speech

Congressman Says Navy Should Keep Quiet.

By the Associated Press.

The Navy's admirals were advised yesterday by Representative Maverick (Democrat), Texas, to keep their mouths "shut" and do what they are "told."

His statement, made on the House floor during debate, was prompted by a newspaper article, in which, he said, Rear Admiral Yates Stirling, commandant of the Brooklyn Navy Yard, gave "an absolute advocacy of war by the nations of Europe and all capitalistic nations, including this, against Russia."

Maverick objected to a sentence about Congress being afraid of communists, because many members have quantities of them in their districts.

"An admiral," he said, "is no more than a dignified policeman and should keep his mouth shut and do what he is told. Foreign policy is wholly in the hands of the Secretary of State."

Rising to Stirling's defense, Representative Darden (Democrat), Virginia, said he was "an admirable, capable officer and I don't believe he would say anything detrimental to Congress."

Boy's Kidnaper Asked for Food, Woman States

Hunt Turns to Livingston, Montana, After She Reports Incident.

By the Associated Press.

Tacoma, Wash., June 13.—A new tip in the hunt for William Mahan and his supposed $89,000 sack of Weyerhaeuser kidnap ransom money spurred a weary army of police and Justice Department agents to redoubled activity tonight.

The search swung suddenly to Livingston, Mont., when a man described as resembling the fugitive was reported to have begged food Tuesday at the home of Mrs. C. E. Jeffries.

Describing the visit today, the woman said she was immediately suspicious because of the stranger's fashionable attire and turned him away.

2 Other Kidnapers Sought.

The report from Livingston—gateway to Yellowstone National Park—came just as it began to appear that the scar-faced former convict had vanished into the underworld that still conceals two other notorious "snatch" suspects.

Having disposed temporarily of Mr. and Mrs. Harmon M. Waley, who allegedly confessed participation in the $200,000 kidnaping of 9-year-old George Weyerhaeuser, a Justice Department spokesman said Mahan's capture is the "next order of business."

Trail Is Cooling.

Even with the belated clew at Livingston, the widening aspects of the search indicated Mahan's trail was none too hot—cooling perhaps with those of Alvin Karpis and Thomas H. Robinson jr., sought respectively for the abduction of Edward G. Bremer of St. Paul and Mrs. Berry V. Stoll of Louisville.

Livingston is about 100 miles southwest of Butte, Mont., where Mahan escaped police Sunday after abandoning $15,155 of the ransom money in a motor car.

Belief that Mahan was hiding with the assistance of friends was expressed by Assistant Police Chief Jack Duggan of Butte.

"If there was a $5,000 reward on his head," said Duggan, "those who are hiding him would turn him over to police in 24 hours."

U. S. to Probe State Parole Systems

By the Associated Press.

Attorney General Cummings said yesterday the Federal Government would investigate State parole systems as a result of the President's interest in the Weyerhaeuser kidnaping case.

Vigorously defending the Federal parole system, Cummings pointed out that the Weyerhaeuser kidnaping suspects were paroled under State systems.

"Manifestly the parole system is part of criminal administration and cannot be given up," the Attorney General told reporters. "But we must strive to improve it. One of the troubles has been too much politics in paroles, too much pressure and too many improprieties.

"We want to find the soft spot. If I am allowed to set up the new Federal Bureau of Crime Prevention, then we may."

Coincidently, he said a rapid increase in convictions for Federal liquor law violations "threatened serious overcrowding of Federal prisons—possibly within the next two months."

Cummings said the parole study "will go on for months" and that "we must strive to improve" the system.

"Every parole board should consider each individual case in the same manner," he said. "It should make a careful, scientific and intelligent study to be able to predict whether the individual is fit for law-abiding society."

Cummings said liquor law violators "nearly doubled in the last year, probably due to stricter enforcement and because we are in an era of passing from one system to another."

Kidnapers Reach Tacoma by Plane

Lawyer Denies Witness Threat In Urschel Case

Convicted Client's Mother Says Laska Told Her He'd 'Slit Throat.'

By the Associated Press.

Oklahoma City, June 13.—Testifying in his own defense, Ben B. Laska, Denver attorney, shouted a denial in Federal Court here today that he ever threatened to "slit the throats" of the Government's two star witnesses in his trial on charges of conspiracy in the $200,000 Charles F. Urschel kidnaping.

"No, no, absolutely not," was Laska's answer to questions concerning the alleged threat to Edward Feldman and his mother, Mrs. Clara Feldman, wife of Albert Bates, Laska's convicted kidnaper client.

Laska made the same emphatic answer to questions by his attorney, David Tant, concerning testimony by Feldman and his mother that Laska directed concealment of Bates' $75,000 share in the Urschel "snatch" booty and that he accepted $10,000 in "hot ransom cash" to defend Bates.

Both Feldman and his mother had testified that Laska told them to "follow my instructions in disposing of the money or I'll have your throats slit."

Laska's appearance on the stand came after Judge Edgar S. Vaught overruled motions for directed verdicts made on behalf of the Denver attorney and his co-defendant, 30-year-old James C. Mathers, of Oklahoma City.

The Government rested its case against Laska and Mathers, charged with conspiracy in the abduction, in that they are alleged to have accepted part of the ransom cash, knowing it to be such, as fees for representing Bates and Harvey Bailey, also convicted for the kidnaping. Laska, the Government alleged, received $10,000, Mathers $1,000. Laska denied he paid Mathers any money.

Road "moochers" are out in greater numbers than ever before and the A. A. A. has issued a warning to motorists to beware of the desperadoes who are hitchhiking by way of the "thumb."

In order to curb thumbers, 12 States have enacted laws prohibiting soliciting free rides on the highways. The States are Connecticut, Delaware, District of Columbia, Maine, Minnesota, New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Pennsylvania, Utah, Vermont and Wisconsin.

U. S. May Close This Afternoon In Insull's Trial

Prosecution to Last Less Than a Week in Bankruptcy Fraud Case.

Chicago, June 13.—The Government's case drew toward a close today against Samuel Insull, sr., his son and his co-defendant as prosecutors offered evidence designed to pin criminal responsibility on the one-time utilities magnate in an alleged $3,500,000 bankruptcy fraud.

Unlike the previous unsuccessful mail fraud case against Insull which consumed a month, the Government expected to close its case, begun this week, by tomorrow. Harold L. Stuart, investment banker, is the third defendant.

A procession of bankers and accountants testified to the transactions that the Government alleged constituted a transfer of assets of Corporation Securities Co., an Insull subsidiary, to favored creditors "in contemplation of bankruptcy."

Shrinkage Traced.

Harold Huling, special assistant to the Attorney General traced the shrinkage of assets of "Corp" during the few months preceeding bankruptcy of the company to show that on the date the bankruptcy petition was filed, 98.8 per cent of the securities of the firm were pledged to banks and other secured creditors.

His evidence supported the Government's claim that only 1.2 per cent of the corporation's assets were left for holders of $24,033,000 in serial gold notes, the unsecured creditors.

Huling also said that of the payment of a $588,120 dividend, which the Government charged was an illegal transfer of assets, $290,145 went to Insull Utility Investments, another Insull subsidiary, $7,497 went to Insull peronally and $4,816 went to Samuel Insull, jr.

"Moral Responsibility."

Edwin Eagle Brown, president of the First National Bank of Chicago, testified that he felt a "moral responsibility to holders of unsecured serial gold notes" when the first "standstill agreement" was brought to him for ratification and he asked that some provision be made for those creditors.

The standstill agreement was a pact whereby bankers agreed to "freeze" Insull loans from December, 1931, until June, 1932.

James A. Jackson, vice president of the National City Bank of New York, also told of the agreement, as did Louis F. Timmerman, New York, vice president of the Central Hanover Bank, involved in a $291,000 deposit, which the Government charged was an illegal transfer "in contemplation of bankruptcy."

Shriners' Wives Are the Guests Of First Lady

Mrs. Stewart Is Honored as 700 Attend Lawn Party.

By Virginia Lee Warren.

The First Lady of the United States was hostess yesterday afternoon to the new First Lady of Shrinedom, Mrs. Leonard P. Steuart, at a graden party at the White House. Guests included Ladies of the Imperial Divan, wives of representatives to the Imperial Council, and Washington women who were hostesses to visiting nobles' wives during their share of the Shrine convention, which came to a brilliant close last night.

Mrs. Roosevelt, dressed in blue chiffon, received the 700 or so guests at 5 p. m. on the south lawn. With her in the receiving line were wives of members of President Roosevelt's Cabinet; Mrs. Steuart; the wife of the retiring Imperial Potentate, Mrs. Dana S. Williams; and the official hostess for the convention, Mrs. Robert P. Smith.

The garden party was one of three major events on the Shriners' wives' program yesterday. At noon the same 700 who later went to the White House had luncheon in the Washington Hotel's Hall of Nations with Mrs. Smith as hostess. Following Mrs. Roosevelt's entertainment, this large group, augmented by thousands of other women who accompanied the rank and file of nobles of the convention, joined with thousands of townspeople in viewing the magnificent pageant.

At Gala Luncheon.

Undoubtedly yesterday, the last day of the convention, was the most important as far as the women were concerned. They appeared at the luncheon in a particularly gay mood, dressed for the most part in attractive floor-length gowns and picture hats.

As they entered the cool Hall of Nations an orchestra struck up "I Love You Truly" and then swung into "Night and Day." Women who recognized the second tune smiled in appreciation. The title adequately described their furious rate of activity for the last five days.

Mrs. Williams, from her place on Mrs. Smith's right at the head table, waved enthusiastic greeting to friends she spotted in the huge dining room. Yesterday was her last day as head woman among Shriners' wives. From now until the final day of next year's convention Mrs. Steuart will be accorded the honors.

Mrs. Williams was gowned in smoky pink crepe with touches of soft blue on her dress and white hat.

Mrs. Smith looked especially attractive in a long-sleeved ensemble of dusty blue with gray fur encircling the wrists. Her hat and large square bag were white.

Mrs. Steuart wore navy blue tucked chiffon with fluffy white jabot and a large white hat.

Mrs. Ella M. Foss, of Lewiston, Me., cousin of the retiring Imperial Potentate, was a study in black and white.

25,000 to Leave.

Almas Temple's chairman for the luncheon, Noble T. F. Collier, escorted the ladies of the Imperial Divan to the head table. Other members of Almas Temple who assisted the women in finding their places were Nobles G. D. Sullivan, S. Wilkes, J. G. Koons and R. C. Soo.

In addition to Mrs. Smith, Mrs. Steuart, Mrs. Williams and Mrs Foss, those seated at the head table included Mrs. Hugh M. Caldwell, Mrs. A. A. D. Rahn, Mrs. George F. Olendorf, Mrs. Albert H. Fiebach, Mrs. O. Sendegren, Mrs. James E. Chandler, Mrs. Thomas J. Houston, Mrs. Frank C. Roundy, Mrs. James C. Hoyle.

Mrs. Amos A. Fries, Mrs. J. Kruse, Mrs. Walter Sugden, Mrs. James H. Price, Mrs. Thomas C. Law, Mrs. Morley E. Mackenzie, Mrs. William C. Miller, Mrs. John N. Sebrell, Mrs. Earl C. Mills, Mrs. James S. McCandless, Mrs. W. Freeland Kendrick, Mrs. Conrad V. Dykeman and Mrs. A. G. Arvold.

While the luncheon was in progress 20 mannequins strolled through the room, displaying new fashions for everybody from a bride to a buxom matron. Fifty costumes, all from Lansburgh & Brother's department store, were exhibited.

Preceding the noon gathering at the Washington Hotel the wife of the new imperial potentate, Mrs. Steuart, was presented with a bouquet of roses by General Motors Corporation in a brief ceremony on a float in front of the Willard Hotel. The presentation was made by A. C. Tiedman, General Motors' official representative to the Shrine Convention. On the float with Mrs. Steuart were two other women, Mrs. Norman K. Haig and Mrs. J. Woodside, wives of General Motors' representatives.

Today the 25,000 women visitors who added a wealth of color to the convention scene are returning to their homes in Mexico City, Panama Canal Zone, Hawaiian Islands, and all parts of the United States. By tonight the feminine population of the Capital will have returned to normal.

Driver Is Free On Bond in Bus Crash Killing 2

Laurel Man to Face Charge of Manslaughter on Tuesday.

In a heavy fog early yesterday morning a northbound Greyhound bus crashed into a parked truck from North Carolina at Engleside, 7 miles south of Alexandria, killing two truckmen. Two passengers on the bus were injured.

The dead men were identified as Mack Hopson, 25, of Durham, N. C., who died instantly of a crushed chest, and Maurice Browdy, of Durham, owner of the truck and a produce merchant, who died at Alexandria Hospital of internal injuries.

Shortly after the crash, Fairfax County authorities arrested J. M. Peregoy, of Laurel, Md., driver of the bus, on a manslaughter charge. He later was released under $1,000 bond, pending his appearance at an inquest Tuesday.

Dr. C. A. Ransom, Fairfax County coroner, went to the scene of the crash and announced, after an investigation, that the vegetable truck was parked facing north when it was struck by the bus.

At Alexandria Hospital, where they were taken, the injured were identified as Mrs. F. S. Beazley, of Newport News, Va., and Esra Bagley, of Southbridge, Mass. Both were cut, bruised and shocked.

Shriner Passes His Fez to Aid Crippled Man

Wives Lead Nobles to Buy 'Washington Gowns'; Other Sidelights.

A new use was found for a fez yesterday by a Shriner with time to kill. He passed his upturned top piece around for an F street cripple and in a few minutes collected a handful of coin of the realm. The Good Samaritan seemed to enjoy himself in his strange role.

Several playful Shriners, unafraid of Uncle Sam or anyone else, all but ran away with a temporary postoffice at the Willard Hotel. Their fun was cut short by a house detective with a sense of humor which couldn't be feazed.

A number of Shriners were seen in department stores, where they were required to provide the wherewithall for wives who could not resist the temptation of taking home a dress, hat or other up-to-the-minute thing of beauty "bought in Washington."

Smithsonian Institution was perhaps the most popular port of call with visitors who felt the urge to a sightseeing go.

A car load of Shriners halted a pedstrian in the Ellipse.

"How do you get to the Capitol?" the driver politely inquired.

"You can't kid me," responded the Washington resident.

The visitors finally drove on in disgust, still perplexed.

This thing of being a Shriner has its good points. Traffic rules mean nothing in their young lives. If mere Washingtonians emulated five Shriners who rode up the Avenue on one motorcycle the would get a free ride—in the Black Maria.

Gen. Charles G. Dawes has nothing on those fez wearers who stroll along smoking pipes from which tassels dangle.

Then there was the Shriner who marched around punching people with a trick cane embellished with a concealed horn.

An apparently inexhaustible supply of mock shells was brought to Washington by the boys of Oasis Temple, who trundled around a miniature cannon. They bombarded their imperial officers from the sidewalk in front of the Willard, but failed to cripple anyone.

A band across the street from the Willard struck up the national anthem. From a distance it looked like the musicians were doffing fezzes to their own tune, but it turned out to be spectators at the rear.

Have the burning sands of Washington at last lived up to their name? Maybe they were just tired marching. Anyhow, the Alladin Temple Band took to a truck.

An air circus was the drawing card on a military exhibition program put on yesterday by marines at Quantico in honor of several hundred visiting Shriners.

Meanwhile, another sham battle was staged on the Ellipse by the Thirty-fourth Infantry. The show included wall scaling, fancy drills and a demonstration of the speed with which soldiers have learned to repair disabled trucks and other motorized equipment.

5,000 Witness Ft. Myer Show For the Shrine

World-Famous Musical Ride Among Events Given at Gardens.

More than five thousand horse-show enthusiasts turned out yesterday at Fort Myer Gardens to witness a special exhibition drill presented by the Cavalry in honor of the Shriners.

As Col. Kenyon Joyce, commanding officer at the post, had announced that there would be no admission charge and that free parking space would be provided, a near record turn-out was made of Washingtonians as well as visiting nobles.

A parade of entries opened the show. In this event an officer's charger with parade equipment, another charger with field equipment, troopers' mounts with both parade and field equipment, light and heavy machine gun squads, scout cars, hunters and polo ponies passed in review.

Six of the outstanding polo horses were shown over a special course followed by a hunters' demonstration. Troop E of the Third Cavalry, led by First Sergt. William Lawrence, gave its famous musical ride which has been judged as one of the outstanding horse show features of the world.

Later Ft. Myer officers rode the Olympic course with jumpers. Four teams of three hunters were shown on the outside course. The drill and show closed with a demonstration drill by the Machine Gun Troop under the command of Capt. Herbert Earnest. This event demonstrated the maneuverability of Cavalry machine gun units going from mounted to dismounted action to render fire support in a battle.

Attempted Sabotage.

Strong evidence of political pressure is obvious in the surprise move in the House District Committee to suppress the local crime report. No better explanation of the sudden attack led by Representative Patman has been given. And there is no reason whatever to suppose that the considerations which led to approval of the report have been upset.

The crime report was rather hastily written. In some respects it places unfortunate emphasis on personalities. But since it was made public it has been thoroughly scrutinized and approved by the full District Committee as well as by the public. For several weeks the committee deliberated before it decided to indorse the findings and recommendations of its investigators. The final vote in favor of the report was emphatic. The committee could not reverse a decision so carefully arrived at without making itself ridiculous.

Reports that political heat has been turned on some members of the committee by high officials are circulating about Capitol Hill. Apparently the politicians are willing to sacrifice all the constructive recommendations of the crime committee in order to insure that one or two of its sections shall be ineffective.

Friends of the District on Capitol Hill will have to stand firm if this sabotage scheme is to be frustrated. Moreover, in view of the urgent need for reform in the local machinery of law enforcement and the popular indorsement of the principal features of the crime report, it would be a serious blunder for anyone connected with the Administration to participate in an underhanded plot to discredit it. From experience, the public knows exactly where to place the blame for political maneuvers of this sort. Few political leaders would be so naive as to suppose that they can sidetrack the constructive work of the crime committee without taking responsibility for that action upon their own shoulders.

Mr. Farley's Conversion.

The most striking aspect of Postmaster General Farley's charges against the Pan American Airways is the consideration he has shown the company and the public dependent upon air-mail service. Instead of impetuously canceling the airway's contract and calling upon the Army (or perhaps the Navy) to carry the mails, Mr. Farley has suggested a revision to eliminate alleged abuses without destroying established operations.

As in the case of the domestic air-mail companies, Mr. Farley asserts that the contract under which the Pan American Airways is operating was obtained without genuine competitive bidding, and that the company has been shown favoritism by former officials. Since these accusations appear in an official report, as the result of a prolonged investigation, they carry more weight than did the superficial denunciation of all the domestic air-mail carriers nearly a year and a half ago. But the Postmaster General seems to have learned a good deal since then.

In the former case charges of fraud led to wholesale cancellation of air-mail contracts and a tragic effort to have the Army Air Corps function as a mail carrier. Following a number of fatal crashes, that experiment was abandoned. But Mr. Farley has not yet attempted to prove that his suspicions were justified. Air-mail companies are now pressing suits in the Court of Claims to recover alleged damages suffered from this action. Regardless of what the outcome may be, the Postmaster General has now a very different line of approach, as may be noted in the following paragraphs from his covering letter to the President:

> It is not believed, however, that the cancellation of these contracts would be in the public interest, as such cancellation probably would disrupt American air service to Latin-American countries and might result in great harm to our trade relations with these countries . . .
> The Pan American has been an important factor in developing air trade and commerce with the Latin-American countries and these contracts should not be canceled when there is no other air company in the United States that can immediately render comparable service in these countries.

If favoritism, fraud, conspiracy or other illegal practices have been followed in the awarding of mail contracts, they should be vigorously uprooted. It is also the duty of the Postoffice Department to inquire into governmental payments that appear to be excessive. Obviously, however, the department is expected to act on valid evidence rather than mere suspicion and to bring about whatever changes are necessary with the least possible interruption of established mail service. If Mr. Farley has come to recognize these fundamental requirements of supervisory policy, a substantial improvement in the air-mail service may be anticipated.

Secretary Hull Forges On.

Addressing a conference of seaport cities held this week in New York, Secretary Hull said that "international sanity requires both military and economic disarmament. Isolationism has been tried and found wanting. It has destroyed $22,000,000,000 of international trade. It leaves every nation struggling as best it can to save for itself whatever it can from the general wreckage."

Mr. Hull seldom loses an opportunity to expound the familiar thesis that a country must buy goods in order to sell them. On this occasion he has carried his analysis further by emphasizing the fact that trade between nations is injured by wasteful military expenditures as well as by commercial barriers to exchange of goods.

Until recently, there was a disposition to discount the significance of Mr. Hull's views concerning the outlook for foreign trade. With the Administration engaged in monetary experiments that added to the existing exchange confusion, and relying upon price-raising devices to restore prosperity, this country was so laggard in the race toward autarchy. Public sentiment, too, for a time veered toward an extreme form of nationalism as a solution for domestic difficulties. This was due in part to a belief that the United States is inherently rich enough and big enough to emancipate itself from foreign markets.

In part, it reflected a counsel of despair based upon a conviction that it was futile to fight a world-wide trend toward national self-sufficiency.

Secretary Hull has steadfastly combatted these views and has gained a right to be heard, not simply by repeating familiar economic axioms but by unremitting efforts to put his beliefs to the test. Time has worked with him, demonstrating the failure of the isolationist policies that have been adopted both here and abroad. Although it is as yet far too soon to appraise the results of the reciprocal trade pacts which the State Department has negotiated, it is increasingly realized that a healthy foreign trade is essential to domestic prosperity.

In his New York address Mr. Hull courageously indicated that a mere removal of direct obstacles to exchange of goods is not sufficient to afford a foundation for expansion of foreign trade. That requires deflation of industrial costs, now swollen by reason of excessive overhead outlays, overcapacity and maintenance of obsolete industrial equipment. "We can not hold our place in the world," Mr. Hull says, "if industry is to rely on doles, subsidies, and other artificial arrangements which bolster up and keep alive inefficiency at the expense of the progress and expansion of the vigorous and efficient units in our economy. We must come down from our artificial stilts to solid reality if we are to achieve substantial industrial prosperity and if we are to hold our place in the world market."

Such emphatic advocacy of lower prices based upon efficient performance is in marked contrast with the emphasis which other Administration spokesmen have placed upon the desirability of unlimited subsidization. Equally striking is Mr. Hull's evident hope that international cooperation will soon put an end to the exchange fluctuations for which Administration policy is partly responsible. "Such action," he says, "would enormously facilitate the remaining need for international price adjustments which must be made before a genuine balance again has been reached."

The Secretary's voice is no longer that of one crying in the wilderness. He has been making slow but sure progress against a widespread public skepticism, against the short-sightedness of those business groups which demand unreasonable protection, and against the contradictory practices of an Administration that has pursued isolationist domestic policies while seeking to expand a depressed export trade. The growing support for the Hull policies shows the value of consistent adherence to a logical course of action.

Come Back From Down Under.

Those who follow tennis—and their numbers are now legion—see a portent in the Australians' victory over the French in the Davis Cup eliminations. In many a locker room word passes that this year the Australians will bear the closest watching in the international play. Perhaps, it is suggested, the fates who weave the web of tennis fortunes have reached the end of their pattern and are about to begin over again.

Australia first won the Davis Cup in 1907, six years after the opening competition in this international classic. She won it again the following year and, with the aid of the New Zealanders, repeated her victory in the next two tournaments. In 1912 the Antipodeans lost only in the finals, coming back to win once more in 1914. The first tournament after the war years went to the Australians and they were runners-up in four of the next five competitions. But since 1924 little heed has been paid Australia as a Davis Cup threat. The United States had its fling for seven consecutive years beginning in 1920 and then France, with its bouncing Borotra and its cool Cochet, took the lead for six years, yielding in 1933 to Great Britain, which won again last year.

This peculiar cyclical characteristic of the series can be explained in part by the fact that a country's crop of outstanding players enjoys its prime for several years. Once victorious, more than one season is needed to develop competition with much more than a bare hope of challenging successfully. Then, too, there is the advantage that attaches to the pinnacle perch of the victors. They play the challenger only after it has survived a long and pulling round of elimination matches. The next hurdle before Australia, for instance, is Germany, for the past few years a danger to every Davis Cup contestant.

Whatever the physical or psychological factors, it is pleasant that once again the high-waisted and bronzed giants from Down-under are coming to the fore. The dash and verve marking the play of Jack Crawford have whetted the tennis world's appetite for more. And many would like to see Adrian Quist's brilliant strategy pitted against the best in the world—not to mention Vivian McGrath's two-handed backhand.

At Springfield.

Two distinct tasks confronted the Republicans assembled in conference at Springfield. The first, and infinitely the easier of the two, was indictment of the Roosevelt Administration. The second was the preparation of a program which is not purely negative in its implications; which goes beyond preservation of the Constitution and denunciation of centralization to a realistic consideration of the existence of new national problems, and the need for new techniques in dealing with them.

The conference was obviously happier in emphasizing the validity of tested political principles than in recommending specific policies under them. Two of the most important national problems—the decay of agriculture and the provision of employment—were smoothed over with generalities. In other respects, such as the indorsement of collective bargaining and old-age and unemployment insurance, the Springfield resolutions committee reproduced paragraphs from the political textbook of the New Deal. It is, of course, no sign of weakness to indorse those parts of a rival program on which non-partisan intelligence agrees.

Clarity of purpose and definite opposition to Administration methods were united, however, in the fields of fiscal and monetary policy, and in the unqualified demand for "the immediate withdrawal of Government from competition with private industry." The logical corollary to this demand—the immediate withdrawal of Government aid from industry—was not emphasized.

A constructive and forceful opposition is essential to the successful operation of our form of government. This preliminary conference, confined to the agricultural heart of the Nation, did its part in rebuilding that opposition. It is particularly encouraging when a cross-section of communities which have often been easy prey for fantastic monetary panaceas emphasizes so strongly that monetary stability, both national and international, is the "necessary foundation of enduring national recovery."

Now that the delegates at Springfield have scattered to their homes they probably realize that the essential strength of opposition is not to be derived from vehemence of denunciation. It was far-fetched, for instance, to accuse the President of reducing Congress to a group of "timeservers." The blame for that outcome, if deserved, must be attributed to Congress itself, or to the electorate which is responsible for the choice of individual Congressmen. Overdrawn indictments of the Administration can only tend to dissipate the effect of valid criticism of its many blunders.

As the forthcoming political campaign moves into action it is of national importance that the opposition should temper its offense with logic, and be prepared to defend itself effectively against the "what would you do" criticism which will properly be posed on every hand. A strong case does not mean that adequate preparation is unnecessary. And in the preliminary regional meeting at Springfield this seems to have been inadequately realized.

Otherwise somebody would have suggested a better theme song than "John Brown's Body" for a conference which so sharply attacked the overriding of States' rights.

The Parting Guests.

It will be a long time before Washingtonians will forget the spirit of good will which prompted some 2,000 Shriners to march in Wednesday's downpour rather than disappoint the lines of spectators. Last night's parade was far more ornate, so far as numbers, floats and color were concerned, but it did not rouse the same feeling of mixed pity and pride as did its predecessor. Dinner coats, flannels, shirt fronts, white shoes and musical instruments were not spared by the elements. Neither did the marchers spare themselves, but presented as festive an air as if colds, influenza and possible pneumonia were unknown.

Already the parking ban has been removed, thousands of visitors are homeward bound and the city is in the throes of offsetting its morning-after look by tearing down grand stands and cleaning up littered streets. Besides its dizzy memories of the men who lavished color and gayety on Washington for several days, the city has a feather in its fez by having a native son as "Imperial Potentate." For this, Nobles, for your friendly jollity, and for your part in seeing that the festivities conquered all obstacles, the National Capital salutes you, and hopes you had a good time, too.

Apparently the Administration is not discouraged. It still hopes to find some preparation that will prevent the Supreme Court from eating holes in its blanket legislation.—Hartford Courant.

Give Pitts A Chance.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Why should Alabama Pitts be barred from playing organized baseball? Is the game such a holy thing that his presence would contaminate it? Would the spectacle of a playing former convict have a bad influence on the public who would pay to see him play? Would it drive patronage away?

The executive committee of the National Association of Minor Leagues, which ruled against Pitts, is taking itself and its franchises much too seriously. Baseball fans are the world's best sports. They would be the first to applaud Pitts, a man who has not only paid his debt, but has so improved his years in prison as to make of himself something of an outstanding figure in his chosen field of human endeavor. Any man who can do that must have something worth while.

Pitts was guilty of no sex crime. If he had been there might be some reason for barring him from a place where he would be much in the public eye. Sex offenders are barred from the movies, but former convicts as such are not, and surely movie actors are calculated to have a greater effect on the public mind and morals, especially among the younger generation, than are baseball players.

Former convicts must eat, they must have a means of livelihood. Someone must employ them. Why shouldn't they be allowed to work at the thing for which they are best suited. Why should organized baseball refuse to do its share and with a "holier than thou" attitude sit back and say "Let the other fellow do it?" C. H. McGLASSON.

Not So Wonderful.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In your issue of June 12 a letter signed by Miss F. L. Parker appeared. I have never had anything get under my skin as this "Female Doughboy" did. I wish to reply to that letter.

Miss Parker says that the boys were supplied with candy and tobacco whenever humanly possible; also that we were paid a salary to go to Europe and had a wonderful time. Is Miss Parker sure that she doesn't mean the officers of the Quartermasters Corps, and not the fighting units? Her letter dates her overseas service as 1918 and 1919 and of course the war was over in 1918.

My overseas service dates from the summer of 1917 through 1918 until the summer of 1919 as a member of the 151st Machine Gun Battalion, forty-second division, and I want to say that if I got a piece of candy or a sack of tobacco for the first 15 months I was in France I paid three prices for it. The only time I slept on a bed or even a cot was at Base Hospital No. 6, Bordeaux, receiving treatment. Also, on one occasion I went without food, water or sleep for four days and five nights. That not only happened to me but to thousands who were in the fighting unit. Surely Miss Parker can't be talkng about the doughboy.

My record is in the Veterans' Bureau and will show that I draw $30 monthly compensation, and it will also show that I have six gunshot wounds, one bayonet wound, was gassed and had frozen feet.

So Miss Parker can see that we had a wonderful time and don't deserve the bonus, but owing to the fact that I was foolish enough to get permanently disabled and find it kind of hard to live on the $30 compensation, I will take the bonus if I'm approached in the right manner. J. T. DAVIDSON.

A Plan To Reshape The Cabinet.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have often thought of the rather logical classification of news by the progressive newspapers as a time-saver to busy people, although noticing the improper classification of items at times, too. But, nevertheless, classification of all information under comparable titles is necessary to our modern society with an objective of truth universally. Even when truth is presented in the most logical and simple manner, there are far too few who take time to develop logical conclusions therefrom.

This general conclusion may be applied to two more specific problems; namely, the classification of all Government data under comparable, full and complete titles for the practical benefit of not only the Government and special foundations but for the interested general public as well. The second specific problem is that of classification of all Government functions under the various departments whose heads make up the President's Cabinet.

The old idea of trying to please Cabinet heads was tried during the Harding Administration with much regret by all thinking people imbued with a spirit of social honesty. The very admirable feature of the English system of government is that of centering responsibility and the combination in power falls or carries on according to both the soundness and successful execution of the platform over which it rode into office.

Under our American Government we have a similar safeguard against the tyranny of a President and his Cabinet by the impeachment method, so there is little danger of a President ever reaching the point of impeachment if given full support by his Cabinet with the more mature thinkers in Congress closely checking the Administration plans. To center responsibility specifically with an Administration it is necessary first to center all governmental functions under the department heads, with all departments working as a mutual coordinating unit toward an objective defined by the President. A President who is dissatisfied with the degree of coordination of any Cabinet member can get rid of the offending member.

With this centering of functions under the present Cabinet heads and the addition of two other departments; namely, a health department and an education department, a much better unity for all would be attained and a President advocating such a plan would receive the support of the masses.

Crime Publicity.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Because I love newspapers, I occasionally castigate them, in accordance with the biblical sayings, "Faithful are the wounds of a friend," and "Whom the Lord loveth, He chasteneth."

I proceed to the chastening, and assert that it is impossible to acquit the newspapers of the charge of swelling the tide of crime. Of course the newspapers are against crime. But they have the wrong notion that featuring crime news in all its details helps to capture and convict criminals, and to foster a hatred for crime.

Whatever we read in the newspapers we consider important. A person or thing that is featured in the news stands out prominently from 10,000 other persons and things that are unmentioned in the news. Naturally we regard such featured persons and things as important, and attach a glamour and significance to them that by right may or may not belong to them. When news about crime and criminals fills newspapers, and news about worthy men and worthy deeds occupies small places in the corners of newspapers, the masses, who never become famous, but who are so avid of fame that they scratch their names on monuments, begin to feel that crime, and not goodness, pays.

There can be no question that crime publicity fosters crime. In the course of my life I have been acquainted with a hundred criminal and former convicts, and I have found that the desire for notoriety is one of their strongest passions. A criminal who is featured in the news is envied by a thousand other criminals who strive to surpass his record and "fame."

CHARLES HOOPER.

International Contacts.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As a public school teacher for 14 years I have come to think of education from an international point of view.

I have noticed that some newspapers have a column for the encouragement of international correspondence between children in the teens and readily think of the great influence this could have on better relations among the people of different lands of the earth if this opportunity were extended to all children and encouraged by parents, teachers and the public.

I would like to suggest that the United States Commissioner of Education, until such a time as we have a department of education with Cabinet membership, institute a program of international correspondence with the objective of visits to foreign countries among the public school children throughout the entire United States. What would be more influential toward understanding and peace and greater happiness among the growing generation than such a program between the various countries of the world?

It only requires a little leadership of some official of our Government to negotiate with the representatives of the schools of foreign governments. There would be practically no expense added to a present Government division and the expense to the children would be only a few cents a year. By the time a child is about ready to graduate from high school some of them would be able to visit their friends of foreign lands during vacation time.

The Post Impressionist

Syllabic Science.

Post Office, Friday.

WHAT'S a syllable?

We used to think the answer to that question was too simple to require even monosyllabic response. But, ever since one column critic informed us that Lawgiver Lycurgus lived in the ninth century A. D., we have humbly approached the attitude of Bleak House Jo: We don't know nawthin'.

And this time such approach was a safe play. A syllable? It appears, that like the farmers' (not the Shriners') camel, there ain't no sich animal.

In the innocent days of old, Webster defined a syllable as a "sound uttered with a single impulse of the voice." Dear Noah Webster!

He had a long tradition behind him, too: the Greek rhetoricians, the classical poets. It was doubt as to whether English verse should be composed of long and short syllables or loud and soft ones that produced the Elizabethan Areopagitica. Even now, such Americans as are not enslaved by Free Verse found their meters on "stressed and unstressed syllables," and the fair stenographer (like the ancient scribe) divides her words "according to a system of syllabication." Deluded wretches!

The sole correct conception of speech is one of "a flowing current of vocal melody broken only by . . . stopped consonants and phrasal pauses." If the syllable has even a shadowy existence, it is confined to print; a merely visual, never an oral or auditory, unit.

The Abbe Rousselot was the first man unable by ear or tongue "to find within a word or phrase definite points at which the sound might be divided into . . . syllables." We did know that, because the lady who decorates our humble hearth studied French enunciation with this admirable Gaul.

Until today we had, however, no idea that his doctrines had poisoned the well of English undefiled. Today we turned lightheartedly the sportive pages of J. McKeen Cattell's Scientific Monthly, and there—an asp hidden among such roses as "Endocrine Factors in Personality," "The Proper Function of Psychotechnology" and "The Igneous Rocks in the Light of High-Temperature Research"—there was W. L. Schramm, of the American Council of Learned Societies, declaring of every language that even "our visual system of division into syllables is mostly a pleasant fiction," and that the spoken syllable "is of no practical use as a unit of length."

What's more, he says that photographs, phonographic records and charts will prove it.

He says: "The old tradition visualizes connected speech as a chain made up of links, each link a syllable. Supposedly, one could remove a link from any point . . . and study it. But the phonophotographs have revealed no such structure. The only breaks within the speech current are those created by the ending of a phrase, by interphrasal pause for the sake of emphasis or by stopped consonants.

"The scientist conceives the speech current, therefore . . . rather as a metallic bar, which may vary in size and composition . . . but which is still a unit."

And that's not all. Save in the instances above mentioned, "there is no definite point where one kind of sound may be said to replace another."

The trouble is that you and the Post-Impressionist and our academic predecessors thought sounds were produced by positions of the vocal organs. Speech was a sort of automobile: We pulled a lever which set those vocal organs into a certain position, say low gear, and uttered a certain vowel in consequence; then we gave another pull, shifted into second gear, and uttered another vowel. And so on.

Well, those fatuous photographs of the new speech-scientists indicate that speech is the result of movement rather than of position:

"The vocal organs glide smoothly through a phrase, and there is no sharp delimitation between one vowel and another, because the quality of the sound changes gradually with the gradual movements of the tongue, the pharynx, etc."

Just let anybody try to utter the world "alone." Says our authority: "There will be observable on the phonophotographic film a period when he is known to be pronouncing the first vowel. There will be a following period when the 'l' sound is beginning to creep into the vowel. Then there will be an almost pure 'l' sound—then a combination into which the second vowel is entering; the second vowel, nasal elements in the registration which indicate that the 'n' has appeared, and finally a slight explosion to indicate the release of the nasal."

Don't frivilously call this nasal explosion a sneeze. The point is that phonologically "there is no such thing as a syllable."

It's an impressive theory. And it suggests a lot of pressing inquiries. One of these is: What about a monosyllable?

Unfortunate Visits.

SO MANY Senators, in developing into statesmen, have lost touch with their constituencies back home that it is easily understandable why Senators Joe Robinson and Jimmie Byrnes should not want to make this mistake and why they should have returned to their States on visits recently. Jimmie went back for a commencement address and Joe is still in Arkansas, as one can gather from Acting Leader Barkley's troubles, making speeches and shaking hands.

But there is good reason to believe that while these two gentlemen had the best intentions in the world their visits did them not the slightest good. Under the circumstances, it would probably have been better had they remained right here and let the constituencies go hang. Certainly it would not have hurt to make their visits at another time.

They made their visits when the controversy about the Supreme Court's killig of the NRA was hot. This being the case they naturally felt impelled to say something about it. And in doing this they got hooked. Those who know them, who know of their political astuteness, are amazed that they should have put themselves out on a limb as they did, but that they are out on a limb they themselves probably will not deny.

In South Carolina Jimmie gave it as his opinion that the Supreme Court, the Constitution or something had to be changed to permit the centralization of authority here in Washington, and over in Arkansas about the same time Joe gave vent to the same opinion. It's a safe bet that in both States there are ambitious lawyers who aspire to these gentlemen's jobs and that when they heard these statements their eyes almost popped out of their heads.

There is good reason to believe Mr. Roosevelt has regretted the development of this issue. It is the one subject on which Republicans of all shades and creeds can get together and on which they have high hopes of crucifying him. Just whether he really intended to make it an issue when he spoke so belligerently that day to the newspaper boys is not known, but whether he did or was just expressing himself strongly the impression is he now wishes he had kept quiet. But it is an issue now and one from which he can't escape. The Republicans have found something more blood curdling than their "balance the budget" cry would ever have been.

• • • • •

But why Joe and Jimmie should get hooked into it and at the late time they did, will cause their friends to shake their heads regretfully every time it comes to mind. Why, the adverse reaction had definitely set in before Joe and Jimmie made their statements. Even if they had been of a mind to make such statements in the immediate warmth of Mr. Roosevelt's outburst it seems they would have used clearer judgment by now.

Take Jimmie. His is a State with a wealth of States' rights tradition. Of course, the passing years have brought a lot of textile operatives into the State, but it is still probably just about the last place in the Union where one should be advocating the erasure of State political lines. I'll bet that Colgy Blease's relative who is gunning for Jimmie feels more enthusiasm than he has felt for many a day.

The episode throws a new light on Joe and Jimmie. All through the fury of this so-called revolution the old line Democrats have held their regard for them. The feeling has been that they were caught like millions of other Democrats and were trying to make the best of a bad situation. That they were at heart for the stuff that has been pulled was impossible for anyone who knew them to believe.

Many a time I have heard a Democrat say, "I feel sorry for Joe and Jimmie. They can't say what they think. They are party leaders and are trying to go along to the best of their ability. Of course, they don't believe in this bunk."

But unless that was a slip they made in their home States it looks as though they do believe in it, that they are smeared with it from head to toe. There was no need for them, facing re-election, to become smeared to this extent. They must be getting old.

Emperor Of The Sahara

Federals Uncover Giant Still In Long Island Mansion, Recalling Days Of Augustine Lebaudy, Who Tried To Set Up An Empire And Was Ultimately Shot By His Wife.

By Ralph E. Renaud.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

New York.

A PERSON or a family sometimes lives down a tragedy. A house never seems to. Every city has its mysterious old houses going slowly to seed and drooping under the shadow of some unhappy experience that once took place within their walls. Little towns have them, for that matter—usually "haunted houses" in the estimation of the villagers. But New York, and the whole suburban area around it, is simply studded with them. Every once in awhile something happens which causes one of them to slouch into the news columns.

The Lebaudy mansion, in Westbury, L. I., is the latest of the melancholy procession. It is called Phoenix Lodge, which perhaps means that some day it will rise from its ashes. But for 18 years now it has been abandoned. At least it was thought to have been abandoned, with only the wind whistling through the once-magnificent suites of its 50 rooms. But the other day it was raided by Federal agents who found a 1,000 gallon still operating under the seclusion of its tangled parkways. They said the still had been running ever since repeal and they took a prisoner along with them to ask him about it.

Eighteen years ago pictures of the Lebaudy house were in almost every big newspaper in the country. For in January of that year Augustine Lebaudy, self - styled "Emperor of the Sahara," was shot to death there by his wife in the presence of their daughter, Jacqueline. Mme Lebaudy spent only five nights in jail and never paid any other penalty, for the Nassau County Grand Jury refused to indict her and she was free to return to France.

• • • • •

LEBAUDY was eldest son of the French "Sugar King" and on his father's death inherited $15,000,000. After he came to America, he operated successfully in the market and a lucky deal with E. H. Harriman, in Erie, added a few millions more to his fortune.

But Lebaudy had a mind above stock tickers. His father was a "king." He himself was a man who would be king. And, of all places, he decided to set up his kingdom on the Sahara Desert.

The particular spot he chose was on the African Gold Coast between Cape Yubi and Cape Bodajor, almost directly east of the Canary Isles, which were Columbus' last port of call before he discovered America. When Lebaudy was looking around no country claimed the land and this is easily understandable as it is nothing but a strip of tropical shore with the Atlantic in front of it and a limitless ocean of sand at its back door. Spain claims it now that the French have helped her out with her troubles in Morocco to the north.

• • • • •

BUT Lebaudy thought it would be a nice place for a kingdom. His friends couldn't persuade him to the contrary and he had the means for the enterprise. He left Paris with the biggest armed force a civilian has ever led in modern times. It took three ships to carry his company and they were rationed for six months. Once he had established a landing he proceeded to make a good deal of noise in the world. He proclaimed a nation and a court and insisted on diplomatic missions being sent to him from France, England and the United States. Of course after a few months the Arabs began to bother him and then he demanded protection and battleships from the same three countries. None of them appeared to be interested in the Empire of the Sahara, however, and after a year between the Arab devil and the deep blue sea Lebaudy had to give up the venture.

But Lebaudy couldn't use up his money in a year. He came to the United States, and, still obsessed with big ideas, built him his 50-room mansion at Old Westbury. Then Mme. Lebaudy put a bullet in him and he joined most of the other emperors of history. Curiously enough, Phoenix Lodge stands just next to The Box, another large estate where, a year before, the Lebaudy killing, the beautiful Chilean bride of John Longer de Saules shot the famous football player to death in a quarrel over the custody of their son. It seems to be a neighborhood where ladies are quick on the trigger.

ONE of the newspapers has started a series on the wits of New York. Undoubtedly the stars will be Alexander Woollcott, the bland daruma of the radio, and Dorothy Parker, whose mordant tongue has slain many a windbag. So far, however, the series seems to demonstrate that a witty saying is the kind of airy quip which doesn't fancy itself in cold print very well. But Oliver Herford, dean of all the metropolitan wits, even though he himself is a little out of print nowadays, managed to launch most of his bright sayings with a certain dewey freshness which keeps them as green today as they ever were. Perhaps that was because Oliver said most of his good things before the day of the wise-crack and with a certain form that gives them substance, too.

His classic was offered when the old Waldorf opened. He said it seemed to be "designed to bring exclusiveness to the masses." To a blustery person who said to him "You don't remember me, do you?" he replied, "I don't remember your name, but I remember your manners."

There was something old school in the delicacy and dispatch with which he defiated bores. A certain gentleman of that type approached him at the Players and said, 'Oliver, what do you think—Jimmy Jones over there, has just offered me $50 if I would resign from this club." "Hold out for 100," Herford advised. "You'll get it."

• • • • •

THERE was another bore in the Players now dead, named, let us say, Psmith. There are also French windows at the Players, opening from the dining room onto the verandah. Once Herford appeared in the dining room with a little sign which he hung over the French windows and sat down to lunch. The sign read "Exit in Case of Psmith." The next person to enter the dining room was Psmith who (actually) complained to the board of directors.

Herford is a long, thin gentleman, with a very gentle voice and a very high collar. He loves to chat with his old friends at the Players and never takes any exercise. Some years ago when he was advised to be a little more strenuous, he said he thought he would have to take up skating "because it was so sedentary." If James McNeil Whistler and Titania could have had a son he would have been Oliver Herford.

AS MANY lawyers have proved, it is quite easy to commit contempt of court. But what constitutes contempt of the Supreme Court is a nice question which has never been settled. When the garment workers paraded the other day they marched along singing to the tune of "Three Blind Mice," this song:

Nine old men, nine old men,
See how they rule, see how they rule;
They took away the NRA.
But the Dressmakers Union is here to stay
Let the bosses try to do what they may
With nine old men.

It struck most people as something which had better have been left unsung.

• • • • •

The antique dealers of New York are up in arms over a new ruling of the license commissioner which compels them to take out licenses as second hand dealers. Their remedy is a simple one. All they have to do is to hang out signs, reading: "All Our Goods Are Brand New."

No End of Books

Theodore Hall

Naming The Baby.

I'M SURE the moment is seldom sufficiently solemn when fond parents comb their wits and at last decide upon the name which their offspring will bear for threescore and ten. And I'm sure for a very simple reason—look around you and see for yourself what ungodly combinations occur. Isn't it true? I'd like to adduce some right here, but the reverberations might be embarrassing, nay, painful, in my private life.

But for a sample there's the case mentioned by Winthrop Ames in the book about to pop up any minute now, regarding a boy who was born in the Harter family. His parents were so far unconscious as to christen him Adam, and by the chuckling irony of fate he grew up to become a dentist. Nothing could be more forgivable than his plea to the judge for a legal change of name.

In the very first book of its kind, Mr. Ames has rallied to the rescue of perplexed parents and laid out on the counter some 2,500 first names of boys and girls with their presumptive sources and meanings. "What Shall We Name the Baby" (Simon & Schuster, $1.50) has a range from Abigail to Zorana, from Aaron to Zebadiah. You'd think it an odd sort of book to be compiled by a theatrical producer, but the fact is that Mr. Ames became interested in the subject through his practice of suggesting handsome names for young actors and actresses who had the horrid bad luck to be born with such surnames as Scroggs. That, say, for a gay and lissome creature behind the footlights just doesn't go, you see.

Nor, seemingly, did the "Barrymores" like Blythe any better, nor "Julia Marlowe" Sarah Frost, nor, most pardonably, did "Henry Irving" rest content with John H. Broderibb.

• • • • •

BUT it's one thing to lead a horse to water and another thing to make him take the pledge. Neither Mr. Ames nor the publishers could possibly guarantee salubrius results if these lists get into brash hands. Consider the danger. Though boys seem comparatively invulnerable some pink-faced babe might have to go through life with the name of Swain (even though it means merely "a youth"), or Perryn, or Tremayne, or this exotic oddity (meaning "prospering raven") Outram.

But if those can be defended—and may I say right here that I'm not acquainted with anyone thus ticketed?—let us take a deep breath and consider the girls' names. How do you like Lexine (helper of mankind"), say in combination with Winterbottom? Certainly Xylina ("of the wood") can stand up by itself—very much by itself. And though we're told it means nothing less than "divine gift," I wouldn't wish upon the daughter of my severest critic the soberly-listed name of Fedora.

This derivative meaning business, however, can be run into the ground. Girls' names from Kara to Catalina are supposed to come from the Greek for "pure." Mary means "bitter." Juliet—shades of the immortal lovers!—means "little downy-faced girl." And Pollyanna, of all things, boils downs to "bitter grace." No, some of these sources might well be left unknown. Though I think it's worth a mention that "Believe-It-or-Not" Ripley gains his name from Hyrpa, Anglo-Saxon for "a shouter." And Mr. Winchell is at bottom "a drawer of water."

• • • • •

STILL, Mr. Ames does not leave conscientious parents entirely without a guiding hand. He advises, for euphonic reasons, against choosing a first name which begins with the same letter as the surname. Plain surnames should have plain first names—"Gloriana Potts or Orlando Stubbs seem—well, a little anti-climactic." For a one-syllable surname he recommends three syllables in the first; for a two-syllable, three; for a three-syllable, one or two. That's how fine this naming process can become.

But if you're not of the parental persuasion, don't let even the dozens of amusing, baby pictures abash you. "What Shall We Name the Baby?" can do a good turn in the naming of puppies or race horses, of boats or characters in fiction. And possibly a good new cocktail might gain its title here—as Nahum, "the compassionate, or comforter."

But let us leave such mild quips aside. There'll be no catching up with the all-time best cocktail name in this hemisphere—"I Know That My Redeemer Liveth."

Books On Cats

By William Lyon Phelps.

EVERYONE at all interested can not have failed to observe that in the twentieth century there has been a notable rise in the prestige of the cat. The rotogravures and other illustrated supplements of the daily papers contain many beautiful pictures of cats, and there has been an increasing amount of space in the news columns given to cat shows.

The cat has been a household pet for 2,000 or 3,000 years, I believe, and it took more than 1,000 years for the Egyptians to tame this animal so that it could be a pet of any kind. Unlike the word dog, which is a very different word in different languages—for example, dog, chien, hund—the word cat is nearly the same in all modern languages; cat, chat, katze, gatto, catt, etc.

Miss Anna B. Newman, of the public library of Berkeley, Calif., has performed a real service to cat lovers by publishing in the Berkeley daily newspaper a list of books on cats that are listed in that particular library, together with most interesting comment and a discriminating article on the "Sphinx of the Quiet Hearth."

She quotes Hipplyte Taine, who said, "I have studied many philosophers and several cats; the wisdom of the cats is vastly superior."

In the adult department of the Berkeley Public Library, Miss Newman informs us there are the following books on cats.

D. Bryant, "Care, Feeding and Training of Cats."

New Chairman Assumes Duty On Milk Board

Stultz to Call Meeting of Harrisonburg Producers Soon.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Harrisonburg, Va., June 13.—Russell L. Stultz, secretary of the chamber of commerce, today assumed his duties as chairman of the Harrisonburg milk board and will call a meeting of producers and distributors after he visits the State milk board at Richmond and receives instructions. Stultz succeeds Dr. H. G. Pickett, of the State Teachers College faculty, who with the other members of the original board resigned after there were complaints that the regulations were not being enforced. The board took the position that persons making the complaints were unwilling to press them.

The new chairman plans to call periodical meetings of producers and distributors in order to discuss any problems.

Other members of the board are Frank H. Heatwole, M. H. Adams, William H. Byrd and Luther Bowman.

The Harrisonburg board was one of the first to organize in the State and it functioned voluntarily during the interim between the State supreme court decisions. The original board resigned at a meeting called by the State board to consider a petition by some milk producers to withdraw the operation of the control act from the Harrisonburg area. After the majority voted to continue the control plan, the board suggested that a new set-up be instituted, and Dr. Pickett, and other members were not candidates for reelection.

Danville Delegates Go to Asheville

Tobacco Warehousemen to Convene Today.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Danville, Va., June 13.—Five Danville warehousemen left today for Asheville, N. C., to attend the annual convention of the United States Tobacco Warehousemen's Association, which opens tomorrow.

The Danville delegation will seek a simultaneous opening of Old Belt and Middle Belt markets. They usually open a fortnight apart. The Old Belt warehousemen claim crops in both regions mature at the same time and there is no reason why Old Belt farmers should lose two weeks in realizing on their crops.

Budget Held Too Low For Petersburg School

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Petersburg, Va., June 13.—In the proposed $868,000 municipal budget for 1935-36, set up by the city council and which will be presented for a public hearing here June 27 before its adoption, $187,500 has been set aside for the schools of Petersburg. This figure for schools is $12,500 more than for the 1934-35 session, but is the second lowest since 1923.

This amount is insufficient, according to local school authorities, for the proper operation of the schools here. Henry G. Ellis, superintendent of Petersburg Schools, concurs in this view.

Venus stepped down from her pedestal at the Corcoran Art Gallery and sighed enviously. There was a wistful look in her eyes as she patted her hair back into place.

"You don't know what breaks these modern women get," she moaned. "Now, in my day, things were different."

We leaned against a glass case and listened to her plaintive tale.

"Why," she continued, "when I wanted vanishing cream or a new lipstick I had to send that flighty daughter-in-law of mine, Psyche, over to Proserpine's house across the River Styx to get it and, would you believe it, I tramped all the way from Olympus to the Parthenon without finding a single decent Beauty Shoppe! And you know how catty those Athenian newspapermen could be. That awful Aristophanes, who had that scurrilous column in the Daily Gazette, actually said that if I got another wrinkle my face would look like a prune skin.

"But these modern women have all their beauty and personality problems solved by Frances Mangum, of The Washington Post, and she knows ever so much more about beauty than I did." She smiled shyly. "But then, I had my moments. There was that dear boy, Praxiteles . . ."

Well, since Beauty is Truth, Venus was right: Miss Washington does get a break. All she has to do to keep her nose from being shiny or her chins from doubling is to follow Frances Mangum's advice in The Post. Frances knows her cosmetics, whether they're to be used to please a sweetheart, hold a husband, or make the blonde next door jealous. She tells you where to get 'em, how to apply 'em, and, when the date is over, how to peel 'em off. In short, Frances' column is the answer to a perplexed maiden's prayer.

And Handsome being what Handsome does, Frances also advises you on ways to develop your personality . . . how to acquire that charm which will make men want to shower you with attentions . . . and other women long to cut your throat. Even Madame de Stael could have profited from our Frances' column.

If you have wrinkles instead of dimples . . . circles instead of curves . . . girl-friends instead of boy-friends . . . let Miss Mangum tell you the reason why. Follow her advice and you'll have that movie-actress figure . . . that peaches-and-cream complexion . . . those come-hither eyes . . . and a lot more fun. Her column is found each Sunday on the Household Pages of

Old-Fashioned Remedy Aids Blotchy Skin

Oatmeal and Herb Packs of Grandma's Day Put Up in Kits.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

HERE'S HANDCLAPS for a certain beauty expert. Thanks to her, thousands of women are putting up a winning fight against bad complexions. Miss Twixteens should particularly rejoice, for here at last is an acne knit that is literally T. N. T. to facial blemishes.

In fact, it was Miss Twixteens whom our beauty expert had in mind when she worked out her acne aids. She believes lots of parents don't realize how awkard and self-conscious a bad skin makes an adolescent girl. "And even if they do," she says, "just how many mothers know what remedies to suggest?"

So here's the kit, a real treasure! It contains six complexion packs made from oatmeal and crushed herbs. An old-time remedy to be sure, but just ask grandmother what herbs will do for clearing away blackheads! Next there's a circulation cream. This is a stimulant. It peps up the sluggish circulation, brings new blood, and consequently new tissue food to the skin. Last, there's an acne lotion. This dries up pimples and drives them away. It serves another purpose, too. Apply just a drop of it to a facial blemish before you put on your make-up and it serves as a protector as well as a cure.

A simple kit, you'll say. And so it is. A simple kit, one that's easy to use, and certainly one that's far better for the overtaxed skin than one that contains a myriad of creams and lotions.

The contents are neatly and compactly inclosed, so that you may tuck this little complexion aid away in your suitcase with never a fear of spills.

Pastel Colognes.

Ordinarily there's no news to cologne. It's fragrant, refreshing and a summer standby. But just cologne. At least, that's what we thought until we saw the display in a downtown store. Here are pastel colognes. Inside each bottle is a lovely blossom, a carnation, violet, lily or rose.

And the cologne itself—as fragrant as the flowers, and true to the flower scent.

Boudoir Beauty Box.

Ordinarily equipping your dressing table with everything you need for beauty's sake is quite a problem. Now it's none at all. A well-known cosmetician comes to our aid with a "Boudoir Beauty Box," which contains everything we could possibly need to show our best face from early morning till late at night. This box, a stuning pink enamel affair, which fastens with a small padlock and key, is crammed with 16 facial delicacies. They are cleansing cream, skin tonic, night cream, special astringent, astringent oil, general powder base, hand cream, eye lotion, pore cream lip salve, foundation cream, cream rouge, eye drops, eyebrow crayon and brush, powder and cleansing tissues.

If you were to buy all these things separately you'd pay between $30 and $40 dollars. Coming to you in this fashion they cost only $18.

Lubricant for the Skin.

Sun tanners! Here's warning! If you aren't careful your basking on the beach is going to have bad results. That same sun that leaves you with a gorgeous bronze is going to leave you with a dry, parched skin—if you don't watch out!

The best way to prevent this is to be careful when you cleanse your skin. Don't be content with a good soap and water scrubbing. Don't think that just any good cleansing cream will turn the trick. While you cleanse you must provide the oils which your skin is literally thirsting for. Use a special cleansing oil which not only penetrates the pores and purges them of dirt but also acts as a lubricant.

You may buy a large bottle of this oil for only $1 and that bottle should see you through the summer. You'll find it one of the best things for parched skin aids you've ever come across.

Gardenia-Scented Bath Salts.

Here's one bargain you'll find hard to resist. It's a china jar of gardenia-scented bath powder. It used to sell for $1.50, but now it's just about half price.

The jars come in ivory, green and a misty shade of blue. You should be able to find one that would be the perfect complement to your bathroom color scheme.

Treatment for Oily Skin.

Query—For large pores and oily skin, what treatment would you suggest? I am troubled with this condition all year, but in summer it is particularly pronounced.

MRS. L. D.

Answer—Cleanse your face very thoroughly with a good cream and then wash it with soap and water using a complexion brush. After the face washing, use a skin tonic. This cuts surplus oil and refines the skin texture. If you make this routine a habit, repeating it every morning and night, you should see a decided change for the better in your skin before long.

If you would like suggestions about a good cleansing cream, soap and brush, please write inclosing a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Call Ruth Anne Davis, of The Washington Post, National 4200, Extension 305, for further information, or write, inclosing stamped, addressed envelope.

What TODAY Means

"Gemini."

IF JUNE 14 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9:45 to 11:45 a. m., from 1:45 to 3:45 p. m. and from 6:45 to 8:45 p. m. The danger periods are from 7:45 to 9:45 a. m., from 3:45 to 5:45 p. m. and from 8:45 to 10:45 p. m.

It will be a sad mistake if you let a demagogue, or one radically inclined, taint your patriotic spirit, by your acceptance as true some libelous, or false statement. The only thing wrong with any country, as a rule, is its acceptance of the leadership of unprincipled politicians, whose lecherous ambitions thwart the patriotic endeavors of those trying to serve their countrymen. Business, on the whole, may be spotty, though there will be plenty of money available. You probably will find your personal finances improved before the day is over.

Plunging blindly into sociability without the remotest idea of the cost, will be an error of judgment, likely to prove expensive. It will be an easy matter to cause a breach in a friendship, if ruthless methods are employed to force an issue. Married and engaged couples, as well as those enmeshed in Cupid's snare, will make a grave mistake if they display any sign of being penuriously inclined.

If a woman, and June 14 is your birthday, be careful your eagerness for distinction does not cause you to make too great a sacrifice. Your greatest success will possibly come through work of an artistic nature. You probably will find your permanent contentment in your domestic life. Do not place your faith in pet superstitions, for signs or omens can in no way have the slightest influence over you or your actions. Do not permit yourself to be bulldozed, by one who is inclined to do so, through your failure to show strong enough resentment. Literature, music, sculptoring, or drawing, scientific or chemical research work, as well as selling, are likely to provide excellent mediums through which your success may come.

The child born on June 14 will probably, when it reaches its youth, display an unusual depth of character. Of a very affectionate nature, it will resent a lack of love, so its parents should give it no cause to complain.

If a man, and June 14 is your natal day, your practicability will make it possible for you to succeed in either an artistic or commercial line of work. Engineering, architecture, promotional work, writing, as well as educational activity, are among the lines through which you may make money.

Bacon and Eggs Cooked on Outdoor Fire Will Tempt the Most Jaded Appetite

This Sunday morning take your bacon and eggs out into the country and cook them to the tune of a crackling fire. A wire rack will keep your frying pan and coffee pot from assuming a precarious position.

Measure Coffee at Home; Take Along a Thermos of Orange Juice.

By Dorothea Duncan.

BLAME IT ON the Indian influence if you like, but at any rate don't let the urge for a breakfast of bacon and eggs cooked by an outdoor fire go unheeded. Trot your whole family out Sunday morning to the wide open spaces and enjoy the best breakfast that you ever hope to taste. Remember though in packing the food that your appetite will have grown to double its normal size by the time you have built a fire and sniffed the aroma of sizzling bacon and frying eggs.

Take a thermos of orange juice and another of milk. If you are a real camper, you will make your coffee right over the fire in your old coffee pot. Measure the coffee at home and carry it out in a jar. If you are in doubt about the water, take water in a thermos from home.

Unless your favorite picnic place is endowed with rocks for a grill, you had better take along a wire rack on which to place the coffee pot and iron skillet.

Build a fire and start the coffee, then work on the eggs and bacon. Cook the bacon first and push it to the sides of the pan or lift it out and place on a wooden plate, but keep it near the fire to stay hot. Drop the eggs in next, and if you like them sunnyside down remember to bring a turner from home. Perhaps you would be interested in a royal treat. If so, take along a jar of grated American cheese and scramble some of this with the eggs.

Place the eggs and bacon between slices of buttered bread and sink back with a sigh and enjoy yourself. If you like to hang over the fire with a stick in your hand, try angels on horseback. Take a strip of mild American cheese and wrap it with bacon. Fasten it skewer fashion to the end of a sharp stick. Hold it over the fire until the bacon is cooked and the cheese has begun to melt. Bury your angel on horseback between the layers of a large buttered roll and start to enjoy it immediately.

If you have had almost all the exercise and cooking that you can stand for one day, come home and relax and when hunger threatens you again gather 'round for a meal of refreshing cold dishes that have been prepared the day before.

Ensemble for 'Teen Age Girl Will Encourage Her to Sew

Pattern No. 930.

HERE IS AN ensemble that will be near and dear enough to the 'teen age girl to encourage her to start her own sewing. There are just nine pieces in the pattern, including the dress and cape.

The frock does away with the problem of set-in sleeves, using shoulder straps that start at the front and cross at the back to join the dress. A cener front panel starts in the blouse section, where it simulates pockets and ends in pleats. Another inverted pleat concludes the center back skirt seam. Together they allow lots of freedom for active young legs. The crisp little cape ties at the throat. Sizes are 10 to 16. Size 12 requires 2⅝ yards of 35-inch material for the frock, and 1¼ yards of 35-inch fabric for the cape. If dress and cape are to be made of the same material and all bought at once, the entire ensemble requires only 3⅝ yards of 35-inch fabric.

Paintings Rented By London Dealers

Circulating pictures form the latest cultural movement in Great Britain. Plans are already being made to try a similar plan in this country. In London pictures are being rented to those who do not wish or can not afford to buy. Hence a $250 painting may be taken out for a week on payment of $1. Many critics believe this rental is too high, and efforts are being made to lower it.

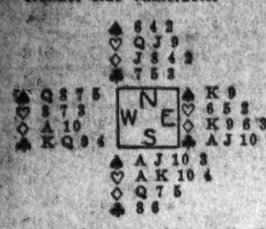
CULBERTSON on BRIDGE

1440.

Battle for Partial Scores.

ONE of the fascinating features of Duplicate play is the bidding battle in deals that at Rubber Bridge would be utterly devoid of interest. The following is a striking example:

South, Dealer
Neither side vulnerable.



At most of the tables of the Duplicate game this deal was played at the normal Rubber Bridge contract of two or three clubs. One East-West pair became unduly ambitious and contracted for three notrumps and won only seven tricks. One North-South pair was doubled at one spade and was set only one trick giving East-West next to top score.

The bidding at one table was particularly instructive in the tactics to be followed in partial-score deals. (Figures after bids refer to numbered explanatory paragraphs.)

South	West	North	East
1♠	Pass (1)	Pass (2)	Dbl. (3)
Pass	2♣ (4)	Pass	Pass (5)
2♡ (6)	Dbl. (7)	Pass	Pass
Pass

1—Because of his spade length, West could not risk taking action.
2—What else was there to do?
3—In Duplicate the bidding must usually be reopened with this strength.
4—West had a very difficult problem. He could be confident that his side could take the contract at a partial-score, or set South if he rebid. But there might be more; there might actually be a game. There was no way of knowing how far East's double was dictated by the situation and how far by his top strength. He resolved upon a third course, designed to trap South. This was the simple bid of two clubs, to encourage South to rebid.
5—East had not the values to make a further bid in the teeth of West's apparently weak response.
6—South was on the spot. The opponents had made no effort to find out whether they held a game. North's first-round pass might mean strong support for one of the two majors enabling it to triumph over the clubs.
7—West was willing to play for penalties rather than part-scores, so he doubled the hearts, feeling reasonably sure that the East-West side strength was sufficient to set the contract.

The Play.

The accuracy of the defense produced a top-score. West opened a heart. Dummy won in order to lead a spade. East put the King of spades right up. South won with the Ace and led the Jack of spades. West winning with the Queen. West properly refrained from leading a third spade, since East would merely trump out the losing three of spades rather than winning the ten. West instead led a second trump.

Declarer won this lead in dummy and led the third spade through East. East nonchalantly discarded a diamond. South made his spade ten and returned the three for ruff with the three of hearts. East overtrumped.

East then started the clubs, and by forcing South to use his long trump the defense made sure South would never win a diamond trick. The defense finally won the two top diamonds and the fourth round of clubs. Declarer won two spades and four trumps, being set two tricks for 300 points.

Clinics Report Patients Aided By Arm Baths

Slow Increasing Heat Held Effective Treatment for Poor Circulation.

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

THE pendulum of mass thinking swings back and forth with the passing of time. In politics, economics and science ideas change, based upon what we at the moment interpret as new discoveries. Dominant beliefs today will recede into limbo a few years hence and we will wonder why we were possessed of so many foolish notions. So it is in medicine. Heat, in some form, has long been recognized as an important therapeutic agent, and yet its recent revival comes to many as a "brand-new" concept.

Recent reports from several clinics indicate that arthritis, the after-effects of rheumatism, and fibrositis in muscles are greatly relieved through the use of rising-temperature baths of one or more parts of the body, until it reaches 112.

The arm bath consists of a closed cabinet filled with water in which one or both arms may be immersed well above the elbows. The temperature of the water is started at approximately 100 degrees F. and increased one degree each minute

Personnel Cut Likely Today For New NRA

Set-up of Revised Agency Will be Revealed With Extension.

NRA employes who have been waiting since the Schechter decision to learn whether they still have jobs probably will know today whether they are to remain on the Government pay roll or join the army of the unemployed.

Donald R. Richberg, chairman of the National Industrial Recovery Board, said yesterday that as soon as the new NRA measure is passed an order will be issued reorganizing the administration. The resolution is expected to be passed today and immediately signed by President Roosevelt. The reorganization order will come from the White House.

Personnel Slash Due.

While Richberg would give no indication of the nature of the proposed organization, it is believed there will be a very drastic cut in personnel. Many employes, however, may be maintained for a few days or weeks to wind up the affairs of the Blue Eagle. Richberg said that no notice had been given employes except that they had been told that if they had opportunity for other employment it would be well for them to accept it.

No hint has been given as to who will head the new organization or whether it will be headed by an individual or a board. Richberg's resignation will be effective Sunday.

Richberg said in commenting on the resolution that the Borah anti-trust amendment may restrict voluntary agreements, "but I don't know how successful voluntary agreements would be anyway." He added that he believed success of proposed State compacts on hours and wages would be even more doubtful.

Richberg's Plans Uncertain.

Richberg said that NRA had received a large number of reports on lengthening of hours and cutting of wages. He said it also had received a number of reports of industries deciding to hold to code agreements, but he pointed out that these resolutions usually were tentative in nature and might not hold for long.

Richberg declared he was uncertain as to his own future except that he intended to practice law. He said he did not know whether he would stay in Washington. He said he had "no hook-up with any organization, labor or industrial."

Richberg said that one of the principal jobs of the new NRA would be to make a distribution survey. This conflicts with plans of the Commerce Department, which has asked for a $5,000,000 works allotment to make a similar survey.

House Is Due to Extend NRA Under Strict Gag Rule Today

presumed, was going to pass it in a few minutes.

"The time has come for members to think for themselves," he declared.

Democratic members didn't appreciate this lecture, and Representative O'Connor, who said "he was not going to stand for any chastising," demanded the regular order.

Then Rich made the objection which forced action over until today.

Accompanying Speaker Byrns and O'Connor to the White House were Chairman Doughton, of the Ways and Means Committee; Acting House Leader Taylor, of Colorado, and Representative Samuel B. Hill, of Washington, chairman of the Ways and Measn Tax sub-committee.

Disposing briefly of his revised NRA plans, the President discussed his remaining legislative plans with this group. If the existing program is to be materially broadened, Mr. Roosevelt gave no intimation of it.

Filibuster Fails.

Before the House headed down the home stretch toward final NRA passage, the Senate, with the sun high in the heavens, had completed 18½ hours of filibustering debate by passing the abridged Blue Eagle extension with two amendments.

The first change, proposed by the Senate Finance Committee, definitely limited the scope of voluntary trade agreements under the revised NRA set-up to five subjects—maximum hours, minimum wages, collective bargaining, prohibition of child labor and fair trade practices.

The second, put forward by Senator William E. Borah (Republican), Idaho, and quickly accepted by Chairman Pat Harrison, lent force to already sharp restriction on antitrust law suspensions.

A third amendment, giving the Senate power to confirm $4,000 Federal employes, and the pivotal point of Huey Long's exhausting filibuster, was quickly reconsidered, then definitely rejected.

At last, with most of the fagged Senators groggy from lack of sleep, the vote came on the resolution. It passed, 41 to 13. The vote was signal for a homeward journey that found most members under the coverlets in the space of an hour. When they went home, it was for a long rest, for the Senate recessed over Thursday until noon today.

The Senate was in continuous session from noon Wednesday until 6:21 yesterday morning. Two hours and 31 minutes earlier Huey had gasped the last of his rambling 150,000-word speech that shattered all records save one—the 18-hour and 23-minute spellbinder of the late Senator Robert M. La Follette.

Huey quit from sheer physical inability to go on. Senators Thomas D. Schall (Republican), Minnesota, and Pat McCarran (Democrat), Nevada, took up the thread, but Long was never able to gain recognition again, except for brief questioning.

Begs for Recess.

The last dragging moments of his filibuster were passed in fervent pleas for a recess agreement that would enable him to get some rest. The humor and vigor of his earlier effort were gone. Over and over, he repeated the same phrases.

Friends off the floor sought to aid him by messaging "suggestions" by page boys. From such tips as these sprang Long's story of his poker-playing uncle, and the history of Frederick the Great. But the always alert Vice President Garner learned of the tip-offs, and put an end to that.

If Long's filibuster accomplished nothing else, it succeeded in crystallizing a strong bloc of new Senators, led by Senator Lewis B. Schwellenbach (Democrat), Washington, in a concerted effort to "squelch" the Kingfish. Schwellenbach said yesterday that this drive will go on.

Talk of amending the rules to prevent recurrence of Huey's recent filibustering exhibitions spread through the chamber. One veteran Senator was considering an amendment that would permit members to talk for more than two hours only with consent of the Senate. Huey's last filibuster gave rise to similar efforts, and one amendment phrased by Senator Carter Glass (Democrat), of Virginia, already is before the Rules Committee. It would confine Senators speaking on appropriation bills to the subject at hand.

Turn to Other Units.

NRA's future apparently settled to the satisfaction of leaders, the Administration next turned its attention to other agencies nearing extinction with the June 16 deadline.

The Federal Alcohol Control Administration offered a problem baffling to the President. A tentative bill has been prepared placing the set-up under the Traesury Department. This has met oppostioin in the Ways and Means Committee and in the Treasury itself. Meanwhile, the House Judiciary Committee was fighting for control of the bill. The plan apparently is to enact the existing liquor codes into law. But what will happen to liquor control during the interim between June 16 and when the bill is enacted is another matter.

O'Connor, softened in his attitude toward the Senate NRA resolution and other measures following his White House press conference, obtained consent of his rules committee to call up also the Administration's bill to extend the railway coordinator's office, which expires June 16. This already has passed the Senate. A bill to extend the Central Statistical Board, which also dies Sunday, passed the House yesterday, 213 to 117.

The President made clear he wanted about a score of measures, including a half-dozen he considers of major importance, enacted speedily, but leaders feared it would take the entire summer to do it.

Rest of Program.

A survey of the holding company bill's chances by the House whip organization, for example, indicates a majority of members are opposed to outright elimination of "unnecessary" holding companies. The President, it is understood, took the view that the controversial Section 11 will gain House approval. Leaders arranged to refer the Senate bill, already passed, to the House Interstate Commerce Committee, which has been deadlocked over a companion measure. Chairman Rayburn hopes to bring out a bill early next week.

The AAA amendments, on the President's urgent list, is virtually ready for House consideration. House hearings on the Guffey coal bill will get under way today and Chairman O'Conner scheduled early Rules Committee action on the Wagner labor disputes bill, which already has passed the Senate.

The Senate Banking sub-committee yesterday took partial action on the Eccles bank bill, another measure on the "must" list. Tittle 1 was agreed to, temporarily extending the deposit insurance guarantee at a 1-12 of 1 per cent premium rate.

Among the other measures the Administration hopes to push through are the TVA extension bill, now hopelessly deadlocked in the Senate Finance Committee; the transportation program, involving motor-bus and water-carrier regulation, and railroad refinancing; ship subsidy legislation, pure food and drugs regulation, nuisance tax extension, and extension of some form of Federal petroleum administration.

Under the direction of the teachers, Miss Grace Roberts and Miss Elizabeth Griffith, with Mrs. Mary Riggs, pianist, an operetta, "The Little Gypsy," was given by the 60 pupils.

The senior trustee, Greenberry Griffith, presented the diplomas to the graduates, who were Carolyn Oland, Bessie Glass, William Seek, Harold Morris and Harry Fluke.

WATCH KIDNEYS SAME AS BOWELS

Wash Out Your 79,200 Feet of Kidney Tubes

Your bowels contain only 27 feet of intestines, yet the kidneys contain nearly 10 million tiny tubes or filters which would measure 79,200 feet if laid end to end. Therefore, it is just as important to watch the kidneys as the bowels. Kidneys are working all the time and are one of Nature's chief ways of taking the acids and poisonous waste out of the blood.

Healthy persons pass thru the bladder 3 pints a day and get rid of more than 3 pounds of waste matter. If you pass less than this, your 79,200 feet of kidney tubes may be clogged with poisonous waste. This is a danger signal and may be the beginning of nagging backache, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swollen feet and ankles, rheumatic pains and dizziness.

Kidneys should be watched closely and need cleaning out the same as bowels. Ask your druggist for DOAN'S PILLS, an old prescription, which has been used by millions of kidney sufferers for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help to wash out your 79,200 feet of kidney tubes. Get Doan's Pills at your druggist. © 1934, Foster-Milburn Co.

Dispute Brews On Way to Rule LiquorIndustry

House Group Favors More Treasury Power Instead of New FACA.

By the Associated Press.

A new dispute brewed yesterday between a potent House committee and Administration spokesmen over the way the Federal Government should regulate liquor manufacture and distribution.

Considerable speculation continued also as to whether President Roosevelt would send a special message to Capitol Hill siding with the Administration spokesmen. This speculation grew after Attorney General Cummings and Solicitor General Stanley Reed conferred at the White House for an hour yesterday. Neither would discuss the conference.

When the Supreme Court decided NRA was unconstitutional, the six codes which had governed the liquor industry became inoperative. Plans immediately were set afoot for some sort of legislation to continue the power the Federal Alcohol Control Administration had over the liquor business.

A bill was drafted and submitted to the House Ways and Means Committee. Although its exact provisions were guarded, it was learned that the proposed bill would have made law of the pre-court decision codes and turned their administration over to a new Federal alcohol control commission.

At first there had been differences between Treasury and FACA officials over whether the new commission or the Treasury should do the administering. But finally that was decided in favor of the new commission.

House Ways and Means Committeemen, however, declined to go along. Some contended that one of the President's campaign talks against Herbert Hoover had been that he was creating too many commissions. They insisted that since the Treasury already had a modicum of control over liquor because of tax collection purposes, it also should administer the new law.

Such a suggestion was made at yesterday's White House conference with House leaders, attended by Chairman Doughton (Democrat), North Carolina, of the Ways and Means Committee. Conferees reported privately that the President sided with those who advocated the new agency.

The President had disclosed that he intended to send another message to Congress soon. Because of the liquor situation, many expected it would be on that subject.

Hopes to Avert Coal Walkout Monday Fade

White House Has Made No Move for Delay, Union Leader Says.

By the Associated Press.

Despite pressure by President Roosevelt behind a labor-demanded coal bill, operators yesterday reported chances of averting a Nation-wide soft coal strike Monday had dwindled almost to nothing.

The President told House leaders he wanted quick enactment of the controverted Guffey coal stabilization bill, which some believe would shorten the life of the threatened strike.

Almost immediately thereafter, Representative Samuel B. Hill (Democrat), Washington, of the Ways and Means Committee, announced hearings would be started today or Monday on the measure to set up a "little NRA" for the bituminous industry.

No Plan for Intervention.

The bill's present status, however, makes enactment this week virtually impossible. One large group of operators has informed the United Mine Workers it will not sign new wage and hour agreements without the price-control feature of the Guffey bill. Present contracts expire Sunday at midnight. John L. Lewis, president of the mine union, has ordered all his members to stay out of the mines Monday morning unless new contracts have been signed before then.

Some talk of a Presidential request to the union to continue work under its present wage and hour schedule until the Guffey bill is enacted continued to circulate among coal men here.

Many operators discounted this suggestion. Both the operators favoring the bill and union chieftains denied knowledge of any plan for last-minute Presidential intervention.

Both Sides Ready.

"The White House has not talked to either side recently," said Philip Murray, union vice president. "The industry is doomed to an inevitable suspension of work in the absence of any wage agreement."

From Wheeling, W. Va., came word that operators of mines in the Panhandle region of West Virginia agreed unanimously to close down all their mines June 16 and to cooperate with workers in maintaining peaceful conditions.

Coal men here say their industry in general would not feel the effects of a coal strike for about two weeks. The shoe would start to pinch after that time for businesses which had been unable to store up much coal, they said, adding that enough coal will be above ground by Monday morning for an average supply of 40 days.

Producers favoring the bill conferred at length yesterday, with Senator Guffey (Democrat), Pennsylvania, and Neely (Democrat), West Virginia, about amendments producers want. It was understood one of these Senators would propose the amendments when the measure was considered on the floor. Chief among the revisions is a proviso that the bill be limited to four years. The union has agreed to this amendment.

Richberg Will 'Cry In Private,' He Says

Donald R. Richberg, who retires Sunday as chairman of the National Industrial Recovery Board, said yesterday that he will not make a farewell speech to the NRA employes.

"I prefer to do my crying in private," he said.

Richberg thus fails to follow the precedent of Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, who, when he left NRA, made the employes an emotional farewell speech.

Midwest States Declared Hope Of Third Party

Farmer-Labor Organizer Puts Off Convention In Chicago.

By the Associated Press.

St. Paul, Minn., June 13.—The destiny of a national third party lies in the reception accorded the movement by the "nation's breadbasket," a leader said today.

Howard Y. Williams, national organizer of the Farmer-Labor Party and one of the liberals planning a third party conference in Chicago July 5 and 6, said the success of the venture depended on "midwest states."

"If we can capture several of these midwest states for our program," Williams said, "the movement will sweep like wildfire. The other states will follow our example."

The conference, as now planned, will coincide with another, also in Chicago, of a group of Congressional liberals who wish to discuss feasibility of putting a third party in the field. There is no indication that the two meetings will merge into one.

Williams believes that his group should place a presidential candidate in the field for the 1936 campaign, although a number of liberals are known to oppose this plan.

The Chicago conference of the third party seekers has invited heads of trade unions, representatives of the railroad brotherhoods, farm group leaders and directors of the EPIC movement in California to attend in the hopes of crystalizing all the various movements behind one group.

Williams expects 150 to 200 delegates at his meeting.

"We now have Farmer-Labor parties in Minnesota, Iowa, North and South Dakota and in Michigan," Williams said, adding "the Socialists are ready to come in with us now."

Aims of the proposed third party include social security legislation, sweeping public ownership of packing plants, public utilities and what Williams termed the "monopolized" industries, nationalization of banks, higher incomes for farmer and laborer, labor's right to organize and bargain collectively, and a more equitable distribution of wealth.

U. S. Plan to Rule Relief Setups Within States Irks Governors

duty is clear. We must uphold the Constitution.

"Whether it should be amended is another question that may arise for our consideration. If so, the amendment suggested by some would be more far-reaching and momentous than any that has yet been adopted. Should not this of itself give us pause and lead us to no hasty action?

"There are times, even in great crises, when it may be well to let the people themselves endeavor to work out their problems. Governments can not correct every abuse merely by enacting laws."

Not Taken by Courts.

Regarding any State compact on NRA features, Gov. Peery said he would want to see what was specifically proposed before committing himself.

In greeting the Governors, Gov. Conner of Mississippi said this was an appropriate time to bring about a better understanding between individual States.

"This conference," he said, "offers opportunity to exercise a power not taken from them by the courts, the right of States to make treaties or compacts concerning affairs that are essentially the affairs of local governments.

"I am a States' rights Democrat. I hear from the Republicans about as much regarding States' rights as from the Democrats. If our problems are to be met without centralization of everything in Washington, it must come about through the States cooperating in labor and industrial problems, on taxes, extradition and apprehension of criminals."

Foreshadowing the more explosive discussion later in the day, Gov. McNutt, presiding at the opening session, criticized the road work regulations drafted for the work relief program and said he hoped they would be changed to give flexibility that would make it possible to take account of varying conditions in different States. Gov. Peery, of Virginia, also said that his State highway commissioner had advised him there should be changes made in the new regulations, to meet the situation in Virginia.

State Contributions Up.

The Governors were meeting on a pier 100 yards from the headquarters hotel. Time for the noon recess had arrived but a heavy rain squall was pouring down outside and the Governors decided to remain in session and hear Aubrey Williams, who had just arrived at the hotel direct from Washington. However, Mr. Williams had at that moment climbed into his bath tub and his appearance was delayed until afternoon.

Williams, in reviewing the history of FERA, emphasized that the actual relief contributions of the States and local governments were increasing although their percentage of the total expenditure had declined. The States and local governments, he said, were putting in this year $130,000,000 more than last year.

"It is to the lasting credit of the State Governors and their legislatures that there has been such a willingness to put in their share, after four years of depression," he said.

The State and local share this year will amount in all to $560,000,000, Mr. Williams said.

Under the new works program, he explained, these local funds will be used by the States to feed unemployables, or what he called the dependents who are unable to work.

"This program is to be more Federal than the other one was," said Mr. Williams. "It will be completely Federal in administration. Formerly funds went through State Governors. The new law provides that the President make the allotments to the agents he employs who spend the money. The President has the power to allot to any locality or State."

Governor Ignored.

Under the FERA system, the Governor appointed his own State relief administrator and set up his own organization, receiving the Federal aid in lump sum and distributing it. Washington kept a generally supervisory eye on the proceedings. Occasionally, as happened in Ohio, Federal Administrator Hopkins took the handling of relief entirely out of the hands of the State organization and set up his own administrator. In actual practice the State administrator worked closely with Washington and the State control of the machinery was more nominal than real.

In a number of States the new State works director appointed by Washington is the old State relief administrator. But here in Mississippi Gov. Conner has been ignored and a State works administrator, recommended by the two Mississippi Senators, has been appointed. He is setting up his organization without consulting Conner, who was told that his people would not have a look in.

Smarting under this treatment, Conner was among the first to leap to his feet after Mr. Williams finished speaking.

"Are we to understand," Conner asked, "that the new Works Administration is to be handled in States by a Federal agency set up without consulting the authorities in those States?"

"It will be set up as a direct branch of the Federal Government," Mr. Williams explained. "The answer to your question is—legally, yes."

Postoffice Basis.

"Do you mean without consulting State authorities?" Conner persisted.

"As a general thing, we work in harmony with the State authorities," replied Williams.

"Is the work," Conner pressed, "of relieving human suffering to be put on the same basis as postoffices, and be subject to senatorial and congressional patronage?"

"I haven't seen relief handled from any other than the human standpoint," Williams answered.

"I am asking about the future," Conner said.

"We will cross that bridge when we come to it," Williams replied.

Later Conner said that he didn't want to press the issue out of consideration for Williams, who was his first State administrator, but he declared he would have much more to say tomorrow.

"He didn't deny that they were putting relief on a postoffice basis," said Conner. "In Mississippi this means they are going to set up a political machine hostile to the Governor to use money contributed by the people of the States to further their own political purposes."

The political purpose Conner had in mind was the re-election of Senator Pat Harrison who is up next year. Conner has not indicated his intentions, but reports are current that he is so indignant over being ignored in the work relief program that he may enter the race against Harrison. He exonerates Hopkins and Williams from any personal responsibility for the situation now developing and says they were rendered powerless through pressure on the White House by Senators Harrison and Bilbo, of Mississippi.

"Pick the Soupladlers."

Governor Ehringhaus, of North Carolina rose, and bitingly observed to Williams that the Federal Government "has generously permitted us Governors to sign checks and to direct expenditures, but now that privilege is to be denied us."

"That is one way of putting it," replied Williams.

"That leaves nothing for us to cooperate on," the North Carolina Governor said. "The fact that we happen to be the constituted authorities has made us, in some quarters, suspects. Do you understand that we are not to be consulted about the spending of the setup or anything else?"

"I don't know about that," Williams said, "but, legally, you are 100 per cent right."

"I know that I am legally the Governor of North Carolina and that the others here are in the same fix."

McNutt interrupted to say that he could testify there had been a good working relationship between his officials and Washington.

"We are trying to put people to work and we can all work together," he said. "I don't think any of us should be standing on our dignity."

"It isn't a question of dignity with me," retorted Ehringhaus, hotly.

Gov. Cooney of Montana interrupted to say that "if the Federal Government is putting up 95 per cent of the money I am in favor of it having a good deal to say about how it shall be spent."

Here Gov. Bibb Graves of Alabama broke in grinning.

"The Federal Government," he said, with mock seriousness, "has placed the administration of Federal funds in the hands of the President. I don't think it is fair to ask Col. Williams how the President is going to pick the soup ladlers to dip out this soup."

Session With His 40 Aids Called to Get Works Program Started.

borough bridges (referring to a huge New York bridge project), and you can't spend all your money on postoffices and city halls, but some of this kind of work can be done."

Hopkins listed as low-cost projects such work as sewers, parks and "certain types of highways," and white collar jobs.

Hopkins said he still felt that it would be possible to put an average of 3,500,000 persons to work for one year. He said that at the peak of the program the number probably would exceed that figure.

"I am convinced," he said, "that we can find projects with integrity which the taxpayers and citizens will say are useful and the workers will feel they are doing something worth while."

Absorbing FERA Projects.

He indicated that present FERA projects would be absorbed by the works program "if they can qualify." A total of 2,500,000 persons now are employed on these projects. They include street and highway maintenance and repair, soil erosion, sewer and sanitation work, pest eradication, and provision of recreational facilities.

Curtailment of the program to bring it down to a low-cost basis will mean that many of the projects already approved by the Allotment Board may not actually be constructed. President Roosevelt has finally approved only a part of these proposed allotments.

Hopkins said that cities are working on the problem of balancing their projects so that high-cost work will be balanced by low-cost employment.

At the meeting Monday the State directors will be given information on time schedules, number of men to be put to work in their respective States, and the amount of money to be spent in each State. Hopkins said the State allotments would not be made public.

Resembles CWA Meeting.

The meeting will resemble in many respects a similar meeting held here at the beginning of the CWA program. Hopkins said, however, that he would not tell the State representatives that they must put a given number of men to work by a certain time, as was done under CWA, but that they must first find useful projects.

Hopkins repeated his previous statement that his first consideration will be taking people off relief rolls and that indirect work created by the purchase of materials would be incidental. He added, however, that in spite of the necessity for holding down material costs, he believed one man would be put indirectly to work for each man directly on a job.

Hopkins added that he expected to retain the present personnel of the FERA as the key people in his new works organization. He pointed out that all of them had CWA experience.

He added that he expected to appoint a works labor board of five, possibly today, to handle all questions involving labor policy. He said he expected the board to have a representative in each State.

Wall Street Chief On His Way Here

Gay Leaves New York to See SEC Officials.

New York, June 13 (AP).—Charles R. Gay, new president of the New York Stock Exchange, left tonight for Washington where he will confer with members of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Although it was not disclosed what Gay will take up with the commission, it is understood that his visit to the Capital is in part for the purpose of meeting certain members of the Securities and Exchange Commission whom he has not met before.

It was learned that the New York Stock Exchange has given up the house at 2416 Tracy place northwest which Richard Whitney, Gay's predecessor, used as headquarters on his frequent trips to Washington for conferences with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

It is understood in exchange circles that Gay feels that it will not be necessary for him to commute between New York and Washington as frequently as Whitney did while working on the stock exchange regulations.

Units of G. A. R. Hold Flag Day Services Today

East Plaza of Capitol Will Be Scene of Concert, Speeches.

Patriotic services celebrating Flag Day will be conducted by the Grand Army of the Republic and the Women's Relief Corps and the G. A. R. auxiliary at 7:30 p. m. today on the east steps of the Capitol.

The practice of honoring the Stars and Stripes on this day each year originated June 14, 1895, in the First Presbyterian Church here. Ever since, the G. A. R. has made much of the occasion.

Today's ceremonies will be preceded by a concert by the United States Army Band. The department patriotic instructor of the G. A. R., Everett P. Warner, will open the exercises with a short address.

Pledges of allegiance then will be given. There will be invocation by a Protestant minister and blessing by a Catholic pastor.

The principal oration will be delivered by Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney, of Wyoming. Fifty American flags, carried by members of the Women's Relief Corps, will be a feature of the services.

State's Rights Wallace Topic At 4-H Camp

Secretary Tells Visitors They Will See Issue Before Nation Tested.

Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace urged members of the 4-H Clubs to aim to high ideals in an address yesterday morning to a group of members representing approximately 1,000,000 young men and women throughout the United States.

The ninth national 4-H Camp assembly was opened on the Department of Agriculture grounds. Secretary Wallace told the representatives that they were still in the shadow of a great war and that because of that they should concentrate their efforts in bringing about a happier and more prosperous Nation.

Wallace said: "I understand the average age of those who are here is about 17 years. So most of you were born and have lived your lives since the Great War, and although you may have had to learn about it as part of your history lesson, it does not mean a great deal to you.

"Most of you know, however, that we are still living in the shadow of that war. Because of its distortions we have to approach most of our problems as national problems, rather than those of the farm, the community, or the State.

"Throughout history there has been a conflict between those who want to emphasize the duties, the rights, and the powers of the individual, and those who want to emphasize the powers of the State. The next 50 years, when you are fathers and mothers, you will see a most minute examination of this problem. It is right that this debate should go on.

"If we are to have a strong Nation we must discover to what extent we must delegate powers to the individual States and to what extent keep them in Federal hands. I think ultimately we shall arrive at a combination of the two points of view which will give us a truly happy land."

"The greatest opportunity in the 4-H Club," said the secretary, "is the opportunity for the unfolding of the maximum ability of each 4-H Club member."

One hundred and sixty girls, with their county agents or club agents, are encamped for a week's visit, as a reward for outstanding achievements in club work. Two boys and girls are chosen from each State, and this year 40 States are represented at the camp meeting.

In another accident near Third street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest, Miss Dorothy Davidson, 35, of the 400 block of Second street northwest, suffered lacerations and bruises. She was treated at Emergency Hospital.

Hips Fractured in Falls Fatal to Two Residents

John A. Hockridge, 80, of 201-A Bates street northwest, was injured May 27 when he fell on a stairway of his home. He also died in Sibley Hospital.

WHISKEY...THE WAY WASHINGTON LIKES IT!
AGED ONE FULL YEAR IN CHARRED OAK CASKS
MEADWOOD AND OLD AMERICAN OFFER AMAZING VALUES IN FINE RYE AND BOURBON

Smooth, mellow whiskeys long favored for their rich, full flavor

WHAT WHISKEYS! Rich . . . smooth . . . full-flavored . . . pleasing to the palate. No wonder that in Washington and elsewhere men who know their whiskeys talk of Meadwood and Old American with vast respect.

Just taste either—neat. Then remember—under $1.00 a pint! It's astounding. Whiskey men themselves wonder at such value.

Both have been aged in wood for at least a year. Both are full 100 proof. They're made from the very finest grain obtainable.

These fine whiskeys can only be offered at such an unusually low price because they are made in one of the world's largest and most up-to-date distilleries.

The American Distilling Company has made over 2½ million barrels of fine whiskey. When you buy Meadwood or Old American you have the benefit of over 40 years of fine whiskey-making experience.

Just try these fine, old and mellow whiskeys. If you like Rye ask for Old American. If you prefer Bourbon ask for Meadwood.

IF YOU REMEMBER old-time whiskey, Meadwood and Old American are just what you're looking for. They're full 100 proof, smooth and mellow, at a price everybody can afford.

PREFERENCE will be given for seniority of service, other qualifications being equal, in the new efficiency rating system instituted by the Civil Service Commission, according to an announcement of the commission yesterday.

When President E. Claude Babcock, A. F. G. E., communicated with the commission relative to the fact that the system of seniority credits set up in executive orders by Presidents Coolidge and Roosevelt is no longer applicable, and that some provision for seniority credits was needed, L. A. Moyer, chief examiner, Civil Service Commission, made the following reply:

"In reply to your letter, concerning the method by which seniority credits will be granted in connection with the new efficiency rating plan when reductions of forces are to take place, you are advised that the commission is now considering the question of what modification of the method established by the Executive order of June 4, 1925, as amended June 16, 1933, will be necessary in order to accomplish a correlation of reduction of force procedure with the new efficiency rating plan.

"The principle of giving credit for length of service in the process of selecting employes for dismissal or reduction, when the staff must be reduced, will be maintained."

HOLC Anniversary.

Yesterday marked the second anniversary of the signing by President Roosevelt of the Home Owners' Loan Act. In its program of relief of financially distressed home owners throughout the United States, Puerto Rico, Hawaii and Alaska, the organization has already spent nearly $3,000,000,000. New legislation, just approved by the President, makes available $1,750,000,000 more in bond-issuance authority.

The progress of the HOLC was written by Miss Lee Anna E. Burns (F), Auditing Department, HOLC, in this week's issue of "Down the Alley."

An interesting series of lectures on "What the Government Is Doing" was begun last night by the George Washington University School of Government. The first speaker was Dr. Claudius T. Murchison, director, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. Other Government officials will present sketches of the work actually performed by themselves and their assistants. The lectures will be given weekly on Thursday nights.

Dr. Rathbun Honored.

Celebrating the seventy-fifth birthday of Dr. Mary J. Rathbun (F), honorary assistant in zoology, National Museum, more than 40 of her friends and colleagues attended a dinner in the Aquarium Hall, Bureau of Fisheries, Commerce.

Among the speakers were Dr. C. G. Abbot, secretary, Smithsonian Institution; Dr. Alexander Wetmore, assistant secretary, in charge of the National Museum; Dr. Waldo L. Schmitt, curator, Division of Marine Invertebrates, Museum; Dr. S. F. Hildebrand, Bureau of Fisheries; and Dr. T. W. Stanton, Geological Survey. Dr. Rathbun was presented with a bound book of letters, from her many associates, in honor of her long and distinguished scientific service. She responded with reminiscences.

Dr. Rathbun entered the Government service as a clerk in the Fish Commission 51 years ago. In 1887 she was transferred to the National Museum, where she served in the division of marine invertebrates, beginning the classification of the crustacea, particularly the crabs.

After 30 years' service, Dr. Rathbun resigned her position with the Museum, in 1914, but did not retire. The next year she was made honorary associate in zoology at the Museum, and for 20 years she has been actively continuing her work without compensation.

Henry Guthrie, chief, Exhibitions Section, FHA, is making a tour of the key cities of the South to cooperate with the National Association of Real Estate Boards in the furtherance of better housing.

Validity of Ban On Bookmaker Tested in Court

Ex-Betting Agent Granted Tentative Injunction at Hagerstown.

By the Associated Press.

Hagerstown, Md., June 13.—The validity of the new law outlawing bookmaking in Washington County was questioned today in a petition filed in Circuit Court by Fred Sailes, former operator of a bookmaking establishment here.

The petition asks that Sheriff Max Mallott and State's Attorney Martin L. Ingram be enjoined from arresting and prosecuting owners or operators of bookmaking establishments. Judge Frank G. Wagaman signed an order requiring the two officials to show cause before June 25 why an injunction should not be issued.

Sailes' petition contends that the law, which was passed at the recent General Assembly, only repeals and reenacts section 251 of the State code, one of the sections embodied in the general State's law outlawing bookmaking. It is the section which exempted Washington, Cecil and Anne Arundel Counties from the provisions of the act.

His attorneys contended that the section in question already has been held unconstitutional and that the Legislature should have amended the section which prohibited bookmaking.

Verdict of Suicide Ends Death Probe

Virginian Found Clutching Cord Tied to Gun.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Staunton, Va., June 13.—Investigation into the death of Dennis Waybright, whose body was found in an old garage near Spottswood early Monday morning, will be dropped following a coroner's report today that Waybright committed suicide.

Waybright, who had been seriously stabbed in the chest last March by James Rickman, was found clutching a cord which connected with a gun. Deputy Sheriff Frank L. Armstrong, who was called to examine the scene of the shooting, said he could not see how Waybright could have pulled the string from the position his body was found and have the stationary gun fire the charge into his head.

U. S. CHEMISTS MINCE NO WORDS!

They specify the kind of gasoline they want...

WHO'S THE NATION'S most important gasoline buyer? The Government!

Do they listen to claims? They do not.

Government chemists designate the kind of gasoline that's permissible for ordinary use . . . what a gasoline must do for ambulances, fire-engines and other Government emergency vehicles.

WHAT HAPPENS when the gasoline you buy is matched against these difficult U. S. Government requirements?

Texaco Fire-Chief takes the tougher test . . . the test for emergency duty.

Experts find it meets the higher set of Government requirements!

IT'S SATISFYING to know that you're buying your gasoline as scientifically as the Government.

Try it. Fill up your car with Fire-Chief . . . and get the emergency power that Government buyers require for ambulances, fire-engines and other emergency vehicles.

TEXACO FIRE-CHIEF

When you buy at this pump you will be getting, at no extra cost, a gasoline that meets the Government's requirements* for fire-engines and ambulances

Nobles Enliven Pace of City's Night Resorts

Impromptu Entertainment Is Order of Week in Gay Spots.

By Kay Ware.

Night spots have been brightened this week by red fezzes and bits of impromptu entertainment by fez owners. Bands have played wherever an audience might gather; Powhatan Roof sported an acrobat, a group of harmony singers and a couple of self-appointed orchestra leaders. The Mayflower Lounge seems to be the spot for Shrine relaxation. Close in popularity is the Willard's Bamboo Room. The Bamboo Room, sadly, is closing the season on June 15, so it's appropriate that its days should end in a blaze of convention glory.

June wedding parties cluster at the Shoreham Terrace, nod at the engagement parties across the way, congratulate anniversary parties at the next table. The Reyes and the Voltaires smile at all alike, skip or soar through their rhumbas or adagios respectively. If you think nights are warm, better take a wrap to the terrace, for Rock Creek breezes are lively and plentiful there.

Steamship Potomac moves over to a larger and more convenient dock and now sails nightly at Seventh and Water streets promptly at the stroke of 8:45. There's a moon these evenings which looks particularly well from the river. In case of rain, large lounges keep you dry.

A fashion show of summer beach styles will be trotted out and around the pool at Maryland Club Gardens Saturday evening.

Three young ladies illumine the floor show at the Madrillon this week. Louise Rozelle toe dances, Lita Santor presents Havana tangoes and a jota and Tema Genaro is lithe with acrobatics, Gypsy and Indian numbers.

Dance music by the Brusiloffians with Leon and fiddle setting the pace.

More Shrine stuff!

Practically a whole temple grouped around Club Habana's new cigarette girl, Babs, when they found her to be from home-town Jacksonville, Fla. No wonder, for Babs is blonde and blue-eyed, with a Jacksonville personality.

Trio from Moe Baer's orchestra play for dance interludes, though many guests refuse to consider them as interludes. For when Guitarist Jimmy Bright, Clarinetist Anthony Alongia and Bass Fiddler Frank Flannigan strum and pipe your feet won't stay away from the hardwood floor.

And the other night Shriners with the calliope engaged Childs Gingham Club's Dotty Rozelle to play up and down the streets on that wheezing instrument.

La Paree—Everett and Yvonne, with a waltz and "rigamarole;" Cooper and Madres in a "challenge" dance and soft-shoe number; the Palmer Sisters with high-kick and modernistic routines; Amelia Gilmore in Spanish and toe offerings.

Lotus—Byrnes and Swanson headline the entertainment with duo groups; eight "Manhattan Madcaps" frolic as a chorus; the Three Sensations whirlwind their dances; Judy Ellington drawls in Southern manner.

Charley Conner, the chef at Hall's Restaurant, celebrated his fifty-ninth birthday last week. The entire establishment drank to his health, whereupon Charley said he has been preparing sea food for the consuming public for 35 years, and can think of no better way to celebrate his birthday than to keep preparing it. Incidentally, he is the same Charley who operated the old Crown Lunch on Eleventh street from 1902 till 1927.

The Indina Village at River Bend is now completed. It is a replica of one there 100 years ago. Representatives of various tribes perform ancient rituals and dances.

Jockey Club has been taken under the wing of Lew Kekenes, a local sportsman. He has brought with him Bill Deegan, a bartender of no little repute in town. A colored floor show will entertain twice nightly. Dancing from 9 till 2 a. m. to music by McDermon's Aces of Rhythm. No cover charge.

Rockefeller Leaves For Home in Jersey

Ormond Beach, Fla., June 13 (AP).—John D. Rockefeller, sr., left here for his summer estate at Lakewood, N. J., this afternoon. He boarded his private car two hours earlier after an unusually long stay at his winter home, the Casements, at Ormond Beach.

Contrary to his usual practice of bidding farewell to townspeople assembled to see him off, Mr. Rockefeller today entered his private car without a word and left for the North without even a wave of the hand. Just as the train pulled out of the station here, Rockefeller raised a window shade and glanced out for a moment. Then he lowered the shade.

Cigar Clipper Blade Is Knife to Save Life

Sioux Falls, S. Dak., June 13 (AP).—An emergency operation performed with a razor blade taken from a cigar clipper was credited today with saving the life of Patricia Lee Fleege, 2-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Fleege.

Apparently choked on a foreign substance, the girl was unconscious when Dr. Gregory I. W. Cottam reached her. The cigar clipper was the only instrument available. Dr. Cottam made quick incisions in the child's windpipe to permit her to breathe, then rushed her to a hospital. The child was recovering today, hospital attaches said.

Broadway

By Ed Sullivan

Things I've Noticed.

New York, June 13.

It seems to be that a performer who is homely, who has none of Elinor Glynn's "It," stands a better chance of success on the screen. Perhaps it is due to the fact that the pretty boys and the pretty girls of the flickers arouse a natural audience resentment, the men in the audience resenting a too-handsome hero; the girls in the audience resenting a too-gorgeous heroine. The performer who is not blessed with an abundance of good looks escapes these audience jealousies. Take, for instance, W. C. Fields, George Arliss, Edna May Oliver, Charlie Chaplin, Wallace Beery, Charlie Ruggles, the Four Marx Brothers, Will Rogers, Joe E. Brown, Charles Butterworth, Edward G. Robinson, and the late Marie Dressler. Take, for instance, Jimmy Durante. It seems to be that a large part of their success, the acceptance of them by audiences, was made possible by their appearance. It pays to be "Ifless." Shirley Temple is the best proof.

• • • •

Observations: The most beautiful girl on Broadway is Beryl Wallace, in the E. Carroll "Sketch Book" . . . Dancer most soothing on the eyes is Mitzi Mayfair, Kansas City girl who kicked her way to $1,000-a-week rating . . . Clark Gable is a poor business man . . . He signed for $4,000 a week, on a seven-year ticket . . . When his Federal and State taxes are deducted, he will get about $16,000 a picture for five pictures a year . . . The taxes murder the flicker stars . . . Most of them have to pay back 70 per cent of their earnings, and on top of that is the California State tax and the agents' commissions . . . If you get $200,000 in pay and then have to kick back a tax of $112,000, it must be mildly disappointing, huh? . . . Donald Novis sings "Lovely" to Look At" better than anyone else, I think . . . Admiral Sims' daughter, Ann, will wed E. E. Morrison June 26.

Before the running of the recent English Derby, it was noticeable that British racing opinion veered away from one of the horses in the race, a horse named Theft. The race track people do not like a horse that is badly named and Theft was as badly tagged as a hyena. This superstition of the race track seems to be grounded in fact. Man o' War is an instance. He was brilliantly tagged. The Kentucky Derby winners illustrate the race track belief—recent Derby champions have been the well-named Omaha, Cavalcade, Broker's Tip, Burgoo King, Twenty Grand and Gallant Fox. There is a ring to all of these names. Other well-named colts have been Behave Yourself, Bagenbaggage, Black Gold, My Own, Crusader, Exterminator, War Glory, Big Blaze, Equipoise. But when a colt comes to the races with a name like Theft, it is the better part of wisdom to avoid him. It is the old cry of giving a dog a bad name, and it has worked out too often to be disregarded.

Item: Funniest amateur performance of the season is the newsreel shot of the lady who won $100,000 in the English sweepstakes . . . Her dialect-tinted explanation of her emotions as she heard the race over the radio sends audiences into howls . . . But the last laugh is best . . . She's got the $100,000 . . . The Judge Ben Shallecks (Lillian Roth) deny the Sir Stork rumors . . . Al Lichtmann, as president of United Artists, so wire congrats!

• • • •

John Perona's Westchester Bath Club is one of the swankier suburban rendezvous . . . It originally was the mansion of Forhan, the tooth paster . . . Looking at the place, it is hard to imagine that so much beauty could be squeezed out of a tube of tooth paste . . . Perona, an Italian, is the most successful of the supper club operators . . . In the prohibition era he built up a reputation for fine food and fine liquor, and when prohibition ended, he cashed in on a solid reputation . . . So, too, did Sherman Billingsley, at the Stork Club . . . Most amazing success in town is that of Leon and Eddie's . . . Eddie is Eddie Davis, who was a master of ceremonies in smaller night clubs . . . Leon was the head waiter for Clayton, Jackson and Durante. Today they clean up perhaps $250,000 a year . . . They were smart enough to advertise, and when you have something to sell, advertising will keep the cash register playing its own obbligato.

• • • •

The East Side seems to have won out as the better location for supper clubs. The trend seems to be away from Broadway and either close to Fifth avenue or beyond it. The Furious Fifties continue to be the prize locations with most of the hotter spots bunching along Fifty-second street. The answer is, I think, that the strict parking regulations near Broadway have ruined that sector. People prefer the East Side clubs because they can find parking space for their autos.

• • • •

Of all the youngsters on the screen, it seems to this observer that Jean Arthur is best equipped to win her way into the big-name brackets of Hollywood . . . Her performance in "Public Hero No. 1" is one of the sweller efforts of the screen cinema year . . . I don't know of any performance since that of Claudette Colbert in "It Happened One Night" that was so contagious . . . Mark down the name of Jean Arthur on your movie memo pads . . . This youngster is going to travel far, quickly.

Parking Ban Lifted As Conclave Closes

The Shrine convention parking ban was lifted at midnight last night—18 hours ahead of schedule.

It was decided to lift the restriction following a conference between Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen, Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer and Police Superintendent Ernest W. Brown. It was estimated that a large number of visitors left Washington last night, thus justifying return to standard parking regulations.

Inquiry Opens To Find Pitts' Hidden Assets

New Officers of Smith Co. Seek Accounting From Wife of Swindler.

An inquiry into the financial condition of G. Bryan Pitts, former head of the F. H. Smith Co., and his wife, Gladys T. Pitts, was begun in the District Supreme Court yesterday by new officers of the company who hope to uncover concealed assets Pitts was convicted of stealing from the company. The indictment under which he was tried, and on which, after conviction, he was sentenced to serve 14 years, charged him with conspiring to steal approximately $5,000,000.

The Smith Co. now hopes to obtain an accounting of the Pitts' finances. Arguments were begun yesterday before Justice Jennings Bailey in the District Supreme Court, although Pitts, now a prisoner at Lorton, was not in attendance. His pretty and vivacious wife sat in the courtroom with a group of attorneys surrounding her.

Two former vice presidents of the Smith Co., John H. Edwards and C. Elbert Annadale, both of whom served prison terms for their part in the collapse of the firm, have been called as witnesses. Both were in court yesterday, but their names were not raechedd. Attorney hope to salvage thousands of dollars from an accounting of Pitts's private fortune.

French Minister Dies in Chamber

Marcombes Stricken as New Cabinet Meets.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, June 13.—Death struck suddenly at Pierre Laval's newly formed cabinet today, Minister of Education Philippe Marcombes dropping dead just as the ministry made ready to hold its first session since Parliament voted it confidence.

The 58-year-old Marcombes suffered an apoplectic stroke on entering the large council chamber, and died almost immediately.

The cabinet session was adjourned until tomorrow.

Political circles expressed belief Mario Roustan, Laval's minister of merchant marine, would be given the education portfolio, and William Bertrand, former merchant marine minister who lost the post when two cabinets fell while he was traveling to the United States and back aboard the Normandie, would be called back to cabinet service.

A physician, Marcombes had served in the Chamber of Deputies several times. He held undersecretaryships in several cabinets and was minister of education in the Paul-Boncour cabinet that fell in January, 1933.

8 Die in Crashes Of Military Planes

By the Associated Press.

Bucharest, Rumania, June 13.—Four persons were killed today as two military planes crashed head on while flying at high speed. The pilots fell with their burning machines which crashed onto a house and demolished it. Two observers cleared the planes with parachutes, but were killed in landing.

Paris, June 13 (U.P.).—Four deaths due to military airplane accidents occurred today. A lieutenant and a sergeant were killed in a crash near Pau, due to fog. Two noncommissioned officers were killed when their seaplane crashed at Berne naval base.

Queen Mary Sits Alone At Ball as King Is Ill

London, June 13 (AP).—Queen Mary, wearing a gown of pink lace, sat alone on a golden throne at the end of the long white and gold ballroom in Buckingham Palace tonight as 2,000 guests danced at the second court ball of the jubilee year.

King George was recovering from an attack of bronchial catarrh at Sandringham, so the Prince of Wales escorted the Queen into the ballroom and took his place in the royal circle.

The Queen was a glittering figure, the famed Kohinoor among the diamonds in her corsage.

At Sandringham the King took another automobile drive over the royal estate and his physicians reported his progress from the illness as satisfactory.

New York, June 13 (AP).—A telephone call decoyed a clerk away from a desk in a branch of the National City Bank today and when he returned bonds valued at $10,700 had disappeared. The call was from an unidentified person who asked that the number of a passbook be checked.

First Lady Bids Press 'So Long,' In Travel Talk

Holds Final Conference of Season; Will Attend N. Y. Club Meeting.

Mrs. Roosevelt will attend the Woman's Club conclave at Chautauqua, N. Y., she announced yesterday at what she termed her last press conference of the season.

Hereafter, the First Lady said, she will be "off the record" until autumn comes. Both she and the President, she added, will attend the Boy Scout Jamboree here in August, and return in the fall in time for the Conference on the Mobilization for Human Needs, which is on the White House calendar for September 28.

To the newspaper women at her conference Mrs. Roosevelt gave some timely hints on packing, which because of her extensive travels, she has down to a "fine point," she added smilingly.

For example, she told the ladies, one small bag should carry everything needed on train, plane or automobile. Another bag, she added, should contain those things necessary for stop-overs.

During the conference two girl members of the 4-H clubs told about their work in cooking and planting, canning and sewing. They were Margaret Morton, of Tennessee, and Mildred Flentke, of Evansville, Ind.

Voteless Status Hit By Rep. Brewster

Lions Club Speaker Holds Sympathy for Capital.

Speaking before the Lions Club of Washington at its luncheon meeting at the Mayflower Hotel yesterday, Representative Ralph O. Brewster, of Maine, said that failure of Congress to devote more attention to the needs of the voteless Capital of the Nation was an indictment of that legislative body.

"You are the voteless wonders of the world," asserted Representative Brewster, "to have achieved so much for this city where you have no vote and no prevailing voice in your affairs.

"Indeed, it is an indictment of Congress that men of intelligence who must pass on legislation for the District do not give more thought and concentrated attention to your needs and interests."

The meeting was attended by about 100, including Shriners from many cities, who saluted William C. Miller, past potentate of Almas Temple and past president of the Lions Club.

Prep School Holding Graduation Tomorrow

Graduation ceremonies of the Washington Preparatory School will be held at the Y. M. C. A. tomorrow after a banquet, which will begin at 6 p. m. Charles A. Trainum will be toastmaster, and arrangements are being made by the Sigma Delta Fraternity, which is headed by Trainum.

Entertainment after the ceremonies will include a one-act play, "The Trysting Place." In the cast are Edith Marie Foright, John Alfred Tworek, Lena C. Wolfinger, Myrtle Elizabeth Thornburgh, Thomas Francis Carley, George Arthur Fuller and Mr. Trainum.

Arts Club Postpones Play.

Harold Allen Long, chairman of the dramatic committe of the Arts Club of Washington, yesterday announced postponement of the dramatic production scheduled for last night until Sunday at 8 p. m. Postponement, he explained, was to enable members and their guests to attend the Shrine night parade.

Louisville, Ky., June 13 (AP).—Cap R. Carden, 60, of Munfordville, Democratic Congressman from the Fourth Kentucky District, died here today at a hospital where he was brought last week when stricken with pneumonia. He had been bedfast since his return from Washington May 29.

Carden had been prominent in Fourth District politics for many years. He was an extensive farmer and oil operator as well as an attorney. First elected to Congress in 1930, he was reelected in 1932 and 1934 on a "support Roosevelt" platform.

Illinois Stops Hunt For University Reds

Springfield, Ill., June 13 (AP).—The Illinois Senate's "red hunt" came to an abrupt end late today.

A special committee voted 3 to 2 to discontinue its investigation of alleged communistic teachings at the University of Chicago.

Protests were made by Charles W. Baker, Monroe Center Republican, who sponsored the resolution after Charles R. Walgreen, Chicago chain drug store executive, charged his niece was exposed to communistic doctrines while a student at the university.

Frau Scholz Leaves Soon For Europe

Frau Leitner Sails With Children to Pass Summer Abroad.

Musical Celebrations to Attract Large Number to Germany.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

Many members of Capital society are going abroad this summer, some having already sailed for England or the Continent to spend their vacations. Many of the diplomats return to their own countries for the summer, when their duties here permit, and in some cases, when they find they cannot leave, their wives and children sail for a sojourn in the homeland.

Frau Leitner, wife of the Counselor of the German Embassy, and their children have left for Germany to pass the summer, and Mr. Leitner, who accompanied them to New York, has returned to Washington. The Ambassador, Herr Hans Luther, has leased a place at Bluemont, Va., for the summer months, and probably Dr. Leitner will spend much time there with his chief, and other members of the staff during the warm weather.

Frau Scholz, wife of the first Secretary of the German embassy, will leave the end of this month to remain abroad until early in October. She and Mr. Scholz will entertain at a supper party Sunday at their home on Cleveland avenue, and then Frau Scholz will begin to arrange her home for the summer and her departure.

Musical Festivals Scheduled.

It is difficult to think of Germany in the summer without thinking of the famous music festivals for which so many cross the seas. This year there will be a long series of celebrations of the 250th anniversary of the birth of Johann Sebastian Bach and Georg Friedrich Haendel, who were born barely a month apart to develop into musical giants. These will be in Berlin.

Munich will attract its share of foreign visitors. Next to Bayreuth, this city is described as the world's most famous music cycle. To the customary Wagner and Mozart opera festivals, a Richard Straus week will be added and a month of dramatic festivals and in Heidelburg there will be other festivals. Miss Abigail Sard, daughter of Mrs. Ingalls Sard, who will be one of the bridesmaids at the wedding of Miss Katrina McCormick and Mr. Courtlandt Barnes tomorrow, spent a whole season in Germany last year.

Hewes Going to Germany.

Special jubilee festivals have been arranged to celebate the 1000th anniversary of the German city of Allstedt in Thuringia, the 900th anniversary of Kulmbach, and the birthdays of 700-year-old Anklam in Pomerania and Burghausen in Bavaria, 700-year-old Hainichen in Saxony and of the great old university town of Jena.

Mr. Clarence Hewes, who sailed for Europe on the Normandie last week, will spend some time in Germany and with his friends, many of them former colleagues in the diplomatic service will attend some of these interesting events.

Mrs. W. C. Eustis Sails Tomorrow

Daughter Will Accompany Her on Voyage to Europe.

Mrs. William Corcoran Eustis will close her house on Rhode Island avenue today. She and her daughter, Miss Anne Eustis, will go to New York and will leave tomorrow aboard the S. S. Champlain for Europe.

Another daughter, Miss Edith Eustis, will remain in Washington with her brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. David Finley, until early next month when she will leave with friends to join her mother in France.

James C. Dunn Back From Europe

Wife and Daughters Remain Abroad For Summer.

The chief of the Protocol Division of the State Department, Mr. James Clement Dunn, who has been in Europe for two months, returned yesterday. He arrived in New York on the S. S. Manhattan. Mrs. Dunn and her daughter, Miss Cynthia Dunn, who sailed early in March with Mr. Dunn, and Miss Marianna Dunn, will remain abroad for the summer. Miss Marianna Dunn has been visiting in Rome with the United States Ambassador and Mrs. Breckinridge Long and Miss Christine Long.

Women of U.S. Impress Visitor From Britain

AMERICAN WOMEN suit at least one person who lives across the Atlantic. After a six months' visit to the United States, Dame Sybil Thorndike has returned to her home in London with some decidedly favorable impressions of modern American wives, mothers and sisters.

Before she left, she gave some of these impressions in a New York interview in which she complimented American women for their uniformly high standard of smartness and for "the wonderful grooming and attention to detail which distinguish the American stenographer as much as the American society women."

Her observations of women in the United States also have convinced her that labor-saving devices are extremely important because they bring "freedom and happiness in their wake, and it stands to reason that a carefree woman running a perfect home with the minimum of effort and with time to devote to outside interests must make the most intelligent wife and mother."

Fur Trimming Is a Feature Of Fall Frocks

By the Associated Press.

PARIS, June 12.—First fall frocks are out in Paris marked by fur trims, striking belts and fairly high necklines. Black is a favorite color in wools, while black accented by such bright hues as geranium or capucine red and vivid green appears in crepes.

The colored incrustations which mark black crepe frocks make them practical for both late summer and early fall wear. One has a bright irregularly shaped yoke of geranium red crepe, another a long diagonal bodice applications of green.

Necklines on the wools are generally fairly high, those on the crepes, slightly lower while the long sleeves are often fairly full at the top and finished with long tight cuff-lines. Skirts are ample in width with the fullness concentrated in front.

Fur-trimmed cape costumes for early fall wear are displayed by Lucile Paray. A deep blue-green wool sleeveless vest and gored skirt is topped by a knee length cape collared in beaver, while a similar black wool cape with a long stole collar of silver fox walks out with a black wool skirt and black satin blouse finished with white satin incrustations.

There is fur on the new suits too. This year it is generally worked in flat pelts such as Persian lamb or Astrakhan fashioned in wide flat collars, narrowed to extend down the front and swirling around to form pockets. The jackets are generally fairly fitted at the waistline, though some straight box-like models are also seen.

The long-sleeved blouses which accompany some of them are as vivid as the incrustations on the black crepe frocks. Nasturtium red and mustard green crepe make several of the smartest. They are all worn tucked inside the skirts.

Roosevelt Presents Cross To Mrs. Dougherty Today

Harris & Ewing.

MRS. JOHN ALLAN DOUGHERTY
will be the recipient today when President Roosevelt presents the Cross of Honor, annual award of the United States Flag Association.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

"WHATEVER HONOR has come to me in the past or may come to me in the future I shall appreciate nothing more than this award" said Mrs. John Allan Dougherty, referring to the Cross of Honor of the U. S. Flag Association that will be given her today.

The presentation will be made by President Roosevelt, honorary president general of the organization.

Each year the cross goes to someone who, during the preceding 12 months, has performed the most signal service in furthering the patriotic work of the association or in bringing the greatest credit to the flag. Mrs. Dougherty was selected as the recipient this year because of her work in connection with the anti-crime campaign that grew out of the national anti-crime conference, held here in the fall of 1933. She served as chairman of the committee to improve moral standards of motion pictures, magazines and other publications.

Yesterday she modestly refused to take credit for what has been done under her direction. Sitting at a desk in the spacious living room of her apartment on California street she insisted as she discussed the work, "I always had splendid cooperation from Women's organizations and church groups. With such help, it is little wonder reforms have been brought about—reforms that will be of more benefit to children than we will probably ever know."

Tells Results of Work.

She explained that as a result of the work indecent films were no longer being made; salacious books, once widely circulated and sold on newsstands were no lnoger marketed openly; and magazines "never so pernicious in influence as motion pictures and some books," had been improved.

Since the cooperation of women throughout the country has brought these results, Mrs. Dougherty is convinced concerted feminine efforts can bring about "almost anything." Consequently she regrets that none of the New Deal agencies is headed by a woman.

"Housing, for example, concerned as it is with the home, comes directly into woman's province," she said. "Directed by a woman comparable to Miss Josephine Roche, housing projects would progress remarkably in this country. What women did with prohibition is indicative of what they can do after men have made 'futile dabs' at changing laws. They can accomplish as much in other lines—particularly those directly concerned with improving living conditions, with making the home a better place to rear children."

Mrs. Dougherty's concern for the welfare of youth is the underlying reason she has taken such an active part in the anti-crime campaign. "Having no children of my own and being particularly fond of them, I devoted my time, strength and whatever talent I have toward making the world a safer place for them," she said.

Was Active in China.

Her activity in contributing to the welfare of children has not been confined to this country. While her husband was naval attache to China (where he died some years ago), she did noteworthy work in forming child welfare clinics, in creating an interest in juvenile courts, and in having special health training courses for girls introduced into hgih school curriculums. A delegate to the Red Cross convention held in Tokyo last October, she made a special trip to China to ascertain how the child welfare organizations were progressing.

"I was amazed to observe what remarkable strides have been made in that field since 1928," she said.

Even more important has been her contribution to welfare of children in her own country through her direction of numerous benefit events. She has been in charge of the last four inaugural balls and the President's first birthday ball.

The honor that will come to her today is not a reward for this work, nor for her ingenuity in creating the Thrift Shop, nor for her endeavor in countless other charity projects. It will come as a direct reward for her work in promoting law enforcement with the present Nationwide war on crime. For this she will be invested with the title of "Lady of the Flag" and will become a life member of the Order of the Flag, the first Washington woman to be so honored.

The following citation will accompany the award:

'An American whose loyalty to the ideals, principles, traditions and institutions symbolized by the Flag of the United States is an inspiring example to others, she rendered during the year 1934 greater service than did anyone else to the United States Flag Association in its efforts to combat crime, fight communism, further American patriotism and otherwise make stronger and more secure the foundations on which the Republic is established.

"The award of the Cross of Honor invests the recipient with the title of Lady of the Flag and carries life membership in the Order of the Flag, headed by Charles Augustus Lindbergh as the first to receive the Cross of Honor and become a member of the order."

Shy Youth Asks Advice on Strange Love Problem; His Friends Look Askance at His Fiancee, Who Has Twice Deferred Marriage.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: Five years ago I came here from a small town in Pennsylvania. I was very shy and knew I had to get over it in order to better adapt myself to my surroundings. I immediately set to work with that thought in mind. I had a few dates with various girls, but was so shy I didn't even venture to kiss any of them.

In December of 1933 I met a sweet girl at a church party one evening. It was love at first sight on my part. I started going with her and almost from the first she began telling me how much she cared for me. She practically took me off my feet. But at that I didn't venture to kiss her until some time in June, 1934. She told me various times she had allowed very few fellows to kiss her. Well, this made me love her all the more.

I asked her to marry me. She consented and we set the date for December 15, 1934. At the time she was staying with her father and a sister, with her mother supposedly in a sanitarium. I never met her mother.

• • • •

Now, here is what happened. I rented an apartment and furnished it with the expectation of getting married and moving in. On the afternoon of the day we were to be married she met me and told me she had bad news for me. She said her mother at the last minute refused to consent to her daughter's marriage to a man she (the mother) had never met and whose family she knew nothing about. She gave me two alternatives: to rush home and bring my folks here or wait until February 15 to get married.

• • • •

I felt like I was "on the spot." I had the apartment rented and the furniture bought, so I agreed to wait until February 15. She proposed, in the meantime, that she and her father and sister come to live with me until that date. I heartily agreed, for under no circumstances would I live with a girl alone in an apartment without being married to her.

So we all lived together and I still kept my self-respect. But my friends were pointing a finger at me and it made me feel miserable. They said she wasn't the right girl for me. With this background, I got to thinking seriously about the matter. On February 15 the girl postponed the marriage again, and on the twenty-first of the month I slipped away from the apartment, taking my clothing and school books. Several weeks later I made ararngements with the furniture store to take back the furniture.

At the time I moved, the girl said she was sorry to lose me; maybe some day I would understand. That has been almost four months ago and I find myself still in love with her, even after all that has happened.

• • • •

Last night I ran into her by chance and just had to speak to her. She was on her way to a rehearsal and she took me with her. Afterward, I saw her home. I couldn't keep from telling her how much I still love her, and she told me she will never be able to love anyone as much as she loves me. She said I have everything she adores except one thing—courage. She said I was too easily influenced by other people.

• • • •

That is why I am writing to you for advice. I could hardly bear to face the music if any of my friends knew I spent last evening with her. Would you advise me to go back to her? Or should I pray to forget her and become interested in the girl I am now going with and whom my friends sanction. Yours truly, WORRIED.

• • • •

Case Requiring Courage.

DEAR WORRIED: I am inclined to believe there is much truth in what the girl says—that you lack courage. You have been yielding faint-heartedly to other pressure than your own convictions all along the line.

First, you acted counter to your social conscience by consenting to share your apartment with your fiance and her family when the marriage was postponed. You made compromise with your convictions through fear of losing her.

Second, you later stole away from this situation like a thief in the night, rather than bring an undefined issue between yourself and the girl into the open, and rather than endure the finger-pointing of your so-called friends.

• • • •

Now you tell me you are "still in love with her, even after all that has happened . . . yet I could hardly bear to face the music if any of my friends knew I had spent last evening with her." I'm afraid that's being what men call "white-livered," and sometimes, "yellow."

• • • •

I do not mean to suggest, in the first instance, that you should have welcomed your fiancee and her family into your home with open arms prior to the projected wedding. On the contrary, I think it was a rather foolishly unconventional thing to have done, dictated more by cowardice than courage in this case.

Nor do I mean, in the second instance, that you shuold not have retired from a position that was untenable from the first. But I do feel in both instances you should have stepped forth more boldly to shoulder the pain inherent in dealing straightforwardly with the issue at stake. I also believe there are issues in every life which must be solved without recourse to the opinions of friends or of society at large.

• • • •

To go back to your old relationship with the girl while her actions remain shrouded in mystery would be to make unconditional surrender to a biologic urge, which is no platform on which to build either marriage or friendship. Happy marriage is necessarily founded on mutual understanding, confidence, trust and interdependence.

• • • •

Either you must forget this girl—not by praying to forget her, but by conscientiously addressing yourself to the myriad interests of every day living in which she has no part and thus gradually outgrowing your need of her—or you must discover and uproot those factors in her background which are acting as a deterrent on her willingness to marry you.

I suggest you ignore—if not disdain—your friends' attitude toward this girl and toward your relationship with her. Let your devotion to her and your expression of that devotion be governed entirely by your own knowledge of her worth. If you can't do this, your emotional allegiance is a pretty poor offering at best.

• • • •

There is a predominant strain of protective friendship in all real love, and unless you are the victim of an illogical infatuation for this girl, I suggest you make a patient, determined, courageous, sympathetic yet plain spoken effort to win her confidence and prove the sustaining nature of your devotion to her.

• • • •

If you can make her feel that your devotion is equal to the task of accepting and understanding whatever unfortunate circumstances are inhibiting the expression of her professed love for you, she may tell you the truth of the matter. There's a possibility she is more to be pitied and protected than censured, if only the truth were known.

But you must remember that you do not deserve her confidence, her respect or her dependence so long as you remain a straw in the wind of every passing opinion. And if you cannot gain her confidence, you are better off apart. M. H.

Question of Making an Issue Of Wives in National Elections Heralds a Feminine Advance

By Malvina Lindsay,
Woman's Page Editor.

MRS. ROOSEVELT will become an issue in the 1936 campaign, say political phophets. It would indeed be strange if she did not. Her public activities, her blazing of new social trails in the White House have given the Nation plenty to talk about. But even if she had done nothing more than give polite teas she would inevitably find herself being debated by voters along with the NRA and the Constitution.

• • • •

Mrs. Roosevelt may be the first wife of a Presidential candidate to become a public issue in a campaign. But she will not be the first one to be a private issue. If her predecessors have not been discussed from platforms, they have been thoroughly analyzed, dissected and judged over the tea cups and the bridge table. Their personalities have hovered unseen over ballot boxes and in several major campaigns been determining factors in election results.

• • • •

This reaction toward wives of public men and of candidates has up to the present been chiefly a feminine phenomena. But always both in pre-suffrage and post-suffrage days, it has been a political influence to be reckoned with.

NO MORE EXCITING issue was injected into Andrew Jackson's tempestuous campaign than whether or not Rachel (to whom his marriage, through a technical mistake, took place before she was divorced) should occupy the White House. Even the burning problems of the sixties could not draw public concern from Mrs. Lincoln's eccentricities. A personal incident of Cleveland's early life came near ruining him politically although later he became for a time a family idol through his marriage in the White House, the subsequent birth of his children and their participation in the Easter egg rolling.

• • • •

McKinley's devotion to his invalid wife did much to win him feminine approval. He was also aided by the report that Mrs. Bryan, while a charming woman, was slightly strong-minded and even helped her hsuband write his speeches. Later Theodore Roosevelt carried the asset of two idyllic romances and a large and interesting family of children. And still later a newly enfranchised and serious-minded feminine electorate was to find in Mrs. Hoover the symbol of prohibition era womanhood.

• • • •

In fact, public men of no age or place have been able to escape their wives. Henry the VIII, no matter what else he may have achieved, is remembered first of all for his eight marriages. Speak of Napoleon and the world thinks of Josephine. Think of King George and there arises the image of the turbaned Queen Mary.

IN A UTOPIAN commonwealth, no doubt, voters would elect candidates by reason rather than emotion—would not be so village-minded as to judge men's fitness for office on the basis of their family lives or what their wives did or said. But we are a long way from achieving that state—in fact just now we seem to be headed in the opposite direction. For men, even more than women, are intent on injecting Mrs. Roosevelt into the party platforms.

• • • •

However, that is all to the good of feminine advance. It is a healthy manifestation that at a time when dictators are herding women back to the kitchen the American electorate is recognizing wives as political influences. It is a tacit assumption of marital partnership.

• • • •

Anyway the issue of public wives is out in the open. There will be no whispering over the teacups in 1936. And fortunately the issue this time has substance and some social significance. Mrs. Roosevelt, unlike many public wives, will be judged on her utterances, her deeds, her general philosophy of living rather than on vague feminine prejudices concerning the way she does her hair.

Reducers Told to Swim, But Diet Must Be Curbed

Weight controllers may depend on swimming and sunbathing to take off surplus pounds, say experts. The young woman pictured above takes time out from her swim to bask awhile on the beach.

The pursuit of slenderness is universal. Most women either want to reduce or get their poundage better distributed. How can they do this without making the reducing program an irksome chore? The following article, one of a series, discusses the swimming method.

By Frances Mangum.

"SURE, SWIMMING is fine for reducing, if—"

It was this "if" which made Capt. Edward H. McCrahon, manager of the Venetian pool at the Shoreham, pound the arm of his chair with emphasis.

"—if it doesn't result in overeating!" he finished.

Mr. Mac, as this veteran swimming instructor is called by his friends, knows whereof he speaks. He conducted a swimming class, made up primarily of would-be pound losers, last winter and he says this daily exercise worked wonders.

"It always will," he declared "if a person is really eager to reduce and is willing to watch her diet. Swimming, you know, works up a hefty appetite, and those who let it get the better of them and go out of here straight for a five-course luncheon can't except to lose weight. They'll probably gain."

Swimmers Use All Muscles.

On the other hand, Mr. Mac pointed out, the woman who conscientiously takes to swimming to reduce can certainly succeed.

"It's an exercise," he said, "which brings every muscle in the body into play. Leg muscles, abdominal muscles, shoulder muscles. It doesn't matter whether a woman's too fat here, there or yon, swimming is the greatest little normalizer I know of!"

Those who are termed "stylish stouts" and who are well-rounded but plumpish can depend on it to bring them down to a nice size, according to Mr. Mac.

"It's a uniform reducer," he said, "and especially fine combined with a sun bath. First, the exercise, and then the hot sun, more exercise and more toasting, and what could be a pleasanter way of losing weight?"

Mr. Mac believes that swimming may be recommended as one of the most helpful of all reducing methods.

A Gradual Reducer.

"In the first place, it's a gradual reducer," he said. "No danger in this way of losing too much weight too quickly. It will bring you down to normal slowly—but surely!

"In the second place it's a mild, conservative way. Breaking down fatty tissues violently or too hurriedly is injurious to one's health—something swimming isn't!

"In the third place it's a form of reducing which every women can tackle. There are plenty who can't diet and who can't play tennis and golf because of physical difficulties, but there are few who can't indulge in swimming and be benefited by it."

Mr. Mac said that even very old women who had to follow specific diets regardless of how fattening—women whose age forbade most forms of exercising—could always take up swimming.

"In fact," he declared, "there was a woman 72 years old in my class last winter."

Cocktails Hamper Dieters.

In Capt. McCrahon's opinion, a large percentage of women are gaining weight due to the cocktail hour. He believes cocktails and canapes are definitely responsible for many of the pounds which swimming and sun bathing are ideal for taking off.

"In this regard, swimming serves a double purpose," he said. "Not only does it counteract the fattening effects of the 'night before' but makes the 'morning after' both beneficial and pleasant," he laughed.

He has found that many mothers send their children to the pool not only for the fun but for normalizing their weight.

He pointed to two overly chubby children paddling around in the shallow end of the pool. "They're weighty subjects now," he said, "but you just wait. If they keep up their swimming all summer, and if their mothers keep them away from too many sweets—as they've said they would—they'll be perfect specimens by fall."

Tomorrow—Mechanical devices for reducing.

Factors Ruling Choice of Mate Are Analyzed

Selection Gives Picture of Parents' Influence, Says Magazine Writer.

MANY A PARENT confesses to failure in understanding why the son or daughter marries "so-and-so." Yet the current issue of the Parents' Magazine carries an article by Cecile Pilpel, director of study groups of the Child Study Association of America, in which the writer bluntly declares that the marriage of children irrevocably holds up to their parents a picture of all that those parents have been to their offspring, of how their life at home, under the paternal roof, has shaped their thinking and feeling in regard to the marriage relationship and to life as a whole.

"Parents," Mrs. Pilpel said, "your son's and daughter's selection of a mate expresses needs and aspirations—whether they have had to marry strength or weakness; whether they have the need to dominate or to be dominated; whether the son has had to marry a mother, or whether the daughter has had to marry a father. Sometimes the only way we can explain the choice of mate is that it offers an escape from parental domination.

"To one child we may have been as the sun and the rain, just the parent to help him flower; to another, possibly, as the parching and shriveling wind. Our own lives may have been of a nature to stress the material aspects—the pursuit of financial security or the straining after class depending on their relationship with us, our children will either walk in our footsteps or as far removed from them as they possibly can. Provided there is a tie of deep affection between mother and daughter, she is likely to follow out the mother's pattern. If son's relation with his father is an admiring one, the old adage of 'like father, like son' will hold true."

If, however, children have lost out in their relationship with parents, Mrs. Pilpel cautions parents not to be surprised when the children show unmistakably their unresolved conflicts in their choice of a marriage partner.

Hearing Set Today After 2nd Tragedy In Fireworks Area

Coroner Will Conduct Inquiry in First of Two Fires.

Toll Reaches Three In Last Ten Days

Four Still in Hospital as Result of Last Elkton Blaze.

By the Associated Press.

Elkton, Md., June 13.—Coroner Stanley Jeffers will hold a public hearing here tomorrow night in the first of two fireworks factory blazes which have cost the lives of three persons the last 10 days.

One person, Mrs. Cecelia McNabb, was fatally injured June 4, and the investigation tomorrow night will be into the circumstances surrounding her death. Two other women were fatally injured yesterday in a fire at another fireworks factory here.

Five persons were injured in yesterday's blaze and four of them still are in the hospital. Two women, Mrs. Laura Simmons and Mrs. Margaret Kilman, who were injured in the June 4 fire and explosion still are in the hospital.

4 Still In Hospital.

Mrs. Reba Kline, 33, of North East, who suffered cuts while escaping from the fire yesterday, was released from the hospital today. Those still in the hospital with injuries received yesterday are:

Mrs. Madeline Stewart, 26, Elk Mills, fractured leg and burns.

Mrs. Edith Harvey, 39 North East, burns.

J. Howard Ash, jr., 26, Iron Mill, burns.

Eugene Futty, 20, Elkton, cut.

All are expected to recover.

Coroner Jeffers said today no formal hearing would be conducted into yesterday's tragedy until the majority of those injured are able to leave the hospital and testify.

Officials Start Inquiry.

Officials of the Triumph Fusee & Fireworks Co., employers of the victims of yesterday's fire, were here today conducting their own investigation. They denied that there had been an explosion, saying there had been only a fire. They did not say where or how the fire originated.

Yesterday's tragedy occurred in an improvised packing room over a garage on property owned by one of the company officials. Ten women and two men were seated around a table packing "spitters" for the July 4 rush when the fire occurred. The upper part of the garage was swept by flames.

The body of Miss Thelma Dunlap, 21, North East, was found in the building after firemen had extinguished the blaze sufficiently to enter. The other victim, Miss Catherine Daniels, 27, Townsend, Del., died in a hospital a few hours later.

Funeral services for Miss Dunlap will be conducted from her home Friday.

Funeral services for Miss Daniels will be conducted tomorrow at Townsend.

$15,000 Rayon Ruined as Van And Auto Crash

Loss Revealed in Virginia Accident Fatal to Motorist.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Fredericksburg, Va., June 13.—Officials of the Horton Motor Line said today that the crash between one of their vans and a car 15 miles south of here last night which was followed by fire, resulted in $15,000 damage to the $23,000 cargo of rayon which the truck carried.

Fred L. Green, Brooklyn, N. Y., salesman, and sole occupant of the automobile colliding with the van, died in Mary Washington Hospital an hour after the accident. No one in the van was hurt.

Unable to avoid the Brooklyn car, the van collided head-on with the lighter vehicle, and then plunged from the highway into a lumber yard, where it was destroyed by flames. Fredericksburg firemen and volunteers saved approximately two-thirds of the van's expensive cargo, but much of the salvaged material was damaged by fire and water.

Work Starts Soon On Timber Project

Large Tract Near Big Laurel to Be Cut Over.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Big Laurel, Va., June 13.—Operations on the largest timber project in this section in several years will begin next week two miles east of Big Laurel, according to W. M. Sargent, manager of the Sargent-Presley Lumber Company.

Trucks will start hauling steel from Dungannon and other points. Grading of the tramways and the laying of tracks will start at once and Mr. Sargent says he expects to have a mill on the ground by mid-July and in operation by early August.

The Sargent-Presley company has purchased all the timber on a tract of 1,182 acres belonging to the Clinchfield Coal Corporation and Mr. Sargent says if the plant runs daily according to plans that it will require at least five years to cut over the land. Some of the logs will have to be trammed three miles to the mill and the lumber will be trucked five miles to the railroad at Glamorgan.

Sale of Berries Near 3 Million

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Salisbury, Md., June 13.—Since shipments started May 14, the Eastern Shore's strawberry crop has brought the farmers nearly $3,000,000, the largest monetary harvest in several years.

The two Virginia counties have about ceased shipping, the Maryland season will close at the end of the current week, and the southern Delaware crop will extend a few days longer.

Eastern Shore shipments, including Monday's movement, have totaled 818,907 crates, containing 32 quarts each, according to the daily reports of the Federal-State Market News Service. This does not include berries processed in local preserving plants.

State Senator O. Straughn Lloyd, one of the largest buyers, and other shippers, estimated the average price paid growers in cash at the point of shipment was $3.50 per crate in the two Virginia shore counties and $3.25 per crate in the central and southern Delaware sections. This is about double last year's average price.

Accomac and Northampton counties, Virginia, shipped 291,376 crates, estimated at $1,019,816 cash return to the farmer.

The Maryland shore counties of Wicomico, Somerset and Worcester have shipped 294,216 crates for which approximately $956,202 was paid growers.

The southern Delaware area, producing later than other sections of the shore, had shipped up to Monday 233,315 crates valued at $758,273 to the growers.

While the yield is below the five-year average, prices were consistently higher this season. As the fruit began to ripen in the Maryland and Delaware sectors shipments found a more competitive market, which forced prices slightly below that which has been obtained in the southern counties.

Motor trucks have moved the bulk of the shipments to the consuming markets. This method of transportation was used for shipment of 684,678 crates. About 11,500 crates were moved by boat and the remainder, 122,829 crates, by rail.

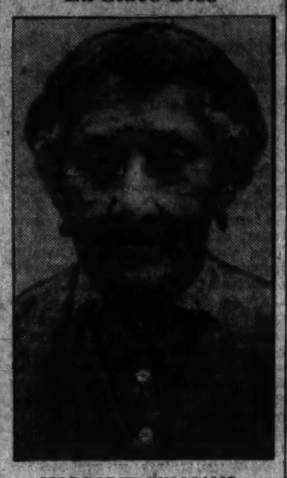
Ex-Slave Dies



MARGARET WILLIAMS.

Former Slave, 110, Is Dead in Virginia

'Aunt Margaret' Williams Was Well-Known Figure.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Leesburg, Va., June 13.—Faint echoes of "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot" were heard today when word reached here of the death of "Aunt Margaret" Williams, 110-year-old former slave, a life-long resident of Loudoun County.

Bright and alert until her death, the aged woman was able to recall vividly days of marching troops in grey and the booming of artillery as the men of Stonewall Jackson went into action. On May 18 notables of Loudoun visited "Aunt Margaret" at The Maples, the home of Mrs. Marion Carter Fletcher, near Upperville. It was her last birthday.

Born in 1825, she was a child when Andrew Jackson was calling meetings of his "Kitchen Cabinet." At the time of the California gold rush she was a young woman of 24. She leaves 11 children, 14 grandchildren, and 18 great - grandchildren.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, June 13.—The Rev. Reason Williams, colored, of Mt. Winans, is a bit huffed up about Baltimore police "arresting" him. It is the first time he has seen the inside of a police station in his 113 years.

The aged negro was confused by traffic in the downtown section while on a sight-seeing trip alone. Patrolman Magaha sent him to Central Police Station for safekeeping. His daughter was called. She verified the fact that he was at least 109 years old.

Williams said he was born in Prince Georges County. During the Civil War he drove an ammunition wagon for the Union army, and he remembers seeing Lincoln, Grant and Lee, he said.

Highway Rerouting At Hagerstown Due

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., June 13.—The most feasible route to follow through Hagerstown in rerouting the National highway so as to eliminate all grade crossings will be considered at a conference here tomorrow morning between Dr. Homer L. Tabler, chairman of the State Roads Commission, Nathan L. Smith, chief engineer of the commission, and the mayor and city council.

Dr. Tabler announced recently that the commission planned to rebuild Route 40 from the Allegany County line east toward Baltimore, and that it was desired to locate a by-pass through this city in order to eliminate the Western Maryland and Pennsylvania railroad crossings on that route.

The by-pass has already been surveyed.

The commission chairman also will inspect the Funkstown section, where a study is being made by the road commission's engineering department with the idea of eliminating the sharp curve on the National highway in that town. It is the plan of the commission, Dr. Tabler said, to eliminate all curves in the program for rebuilding Route 40.

Virginia Set To Fight U.S. Crab Control

Fisheries Commissioner Sees Menace to State's Rights.

Tydings Bill Is Based on Inaccurate Survey, Says Armstrong.

Notice that Virginia "is ready to fight to keep the Federal Government out of the crab business" came today from the Old Dominion's fisheries commissioner, Richard A. Armstrong, according to the Associated Press.

"It's another matter of State's rights, and Virginia isn't a State ready to admit it is licked," said Armstrong, expressing opposition to a bill by Senator Tydings (Democrat), Maryland, designed to place the crab industry under Federal control.

Visits Senator Byrd.

After a visit at the office of Senator Harry F. Byrd (Democrat), Virginia, Armstrong said Virginia has demonstrated its ability to enact and enforce crab conservation laws, "although Maryland has failed." His State, he added, is opposed to the Tydings bill not only on principle, but also because "if it were enacted the Federal control probably would be based upon the Churchill and Fiedler surveys."

"These surveys are incomplete and entirely inadequate," said Commissioner Armstrong. "They have not touched upon the situation in Virginia waters, but are based almost solely upon investigations in Maryland waters."

"Investigation Incomplete."

"The scientific and biological aspects of the situation plainly point to the fact that the Federal Government can offer great assistance to an advisory capacity, but in the case immediately under consideration, that of crabs, the Government's investigation is by no means complete enough to warrant it or anyone else coming to final conclusions.

"Lacking some of the substantial facts in the case, it would be very easy for the Government to make mistakes that would be terribly expensive and cause a great number of people to suffer."

Asserting Maryland's efforts for crab conservation had failed "for political and other reasons," the Virginia commissioner said Maryland "now has resorted to the line of least resistance."

Able to Manage Affairs.

"Virginia is opposed to this proposed Federal crab control, which in its final analysis simply means we admit our own inability to manage our own affairs and pass the job on to the Government," said Armstrong. "We believe eventually fish and all other sea food would be brought under Federal control.

"The Virginia Fisheries Commission believes this would be a very serious line of action, both from the standpoint of the Government and from that of the States involved. The Government, to administer properly the industry, would either become involved in the business or would be placed in a position where it would have to take on functions not in accord with the generally accepted ideas of how best to carry on industry."

8,735 Hired By MERA Up to May 1

Works Division Gives Employment Total for 1934-1935.

$4,640,000 Was Spent on Wide Variety of Public Projects.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, June 13.—The works division of the Maryland Emergency Relief Administration spent $4,640,000 in the State on various projects between April 30, 1934, and that date this year, it was announced today.

The jobs ranged from mosquito elimination to jail building. Of the total spent, $3,700,000 was furnished by the Emergency Relief Administration. The balance was furnished locally.

The money provided employment for a weekly average of 8,735 persons during the 12-month period, it was reported. The maximum number employed in any one week was 11,328.

Projects Are Described.

Projects undertaken during the period in various communities were reported by the works division as follows:

Construction and improvement of 720 miles of roads, highways and streets, involving 1,872,468 square yards of surfacing or resurfacing materials; 6.6 miles of concrete sidewalks and eight miles of concrete curb and gutter construction; 77 small bridges and large culverts built or reconstructed.

Public buildings built, enlarged and improved numbered 480, including 342 schools, 20 hospitals, 4 court houses, 3 town halls, 5 community buildings, 6 fire engine houses, 2 jails, 3 libraries, 2 almshouses, a children's home and 20 offices and work rooms.

Recreational facilities were enhanced in 156 locations, it was stated, by the construction or improvement of 2 stadiums, 3 swimming pools, 80 playgrounds, 59 athletic fields, 9 city parks and 3 golf courses.

Drainage Ditches Dug.

Workers dug 725 miles of drainage ditches to provide drainage for 175,000 acres during the year; river and harbor improvements were made in two locations and five airports were constructed or improved.

In mosquito elimination work, an additional 275 miles of drainage ditches were dug to drain approximately 19,000 acres, affecting a population of 123,000 persons, it was said.

Twenty miles of sanitary and storm sewers, 12.8 miles of water mains, 9 reservoirs, 4 sewage disposal plants and 4 garbage disposal plants were constructed or improved, the division reported.

United Artists, Despite the Loss of Twentieth Century, Sees Big Season Ahead

Many Pictures Scheduled for Early Release

British Studios Help Out; A Circus Coincidence; Amusement Jottings.

(Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.)

By Nelson B. Bell.

All of the anxiety over the future welfare of United Artists Corporation, expressed after the defection of Joseph M. Schenck, Darryl Zanuck and their Twentieth Century producing organization for purposes of amalgamation with Fox, seems merely to have been another exemplification of the fact that the things we worry most about never happen.

With four productions now facing the cameras, five more upon which all preliminary work has been completed and four others now in preparation, the producers whose films are to be released through United Artists have launched their new season's product with a maximum of studio activity.

Samuel Goldwyn, who looks forward to his most active season in many years, has already placed his first production, "The Dark Angel," before the camera. Preliminary scenes have been recorded with Merle Oberon, Fredric March, Herbert Marshall and Katherine Alexander in the leading roles.

Two Soon to Start.

Two Goldwyn films which are now in the final stages of preparation are "Dreamland," Eddie Cantor's next, and "Barbary Coast," in which Miriam Hopkins—soon to be seen locally in "Becky Sharp," first of the new-process, Technicolor productions—will be starred. In this Ben Hecht-Charlie MacArthur adaptation of the Herbert Asbury book Miss Hopkins will have Joel McCrea as her leading man, just as she did in "The Richest Girl in the World."

A new screen play by Rachel Crothers, being written especially for Miss Hopkins and Mr. McCrea, is nearing completion and will go "into work" as soon as "Barbary Coast" is out of the way.

Despite rumors that it had been scrapped, the final sequences of Charles Spencer Chaplin's "Picture No. 5" are now recorded on film and the completed work probably will be ready for preview showings next month.

Harry M. Goetz and Edward Small, heads of Reliance Pictures, releasing through U. A., announce four films, with two for immediate production. The first two to go into the studios will be "Amateur Girl," with Constance Cummings, Robert Young, Frances Drake and Lucille Watson, and "The Melody Lingers On," a screen play based on the novel by Lowell Bretano.

London Also Contributes.

The other two scheduled for early production by Reliance are "Robin Hood," with Robert Donat ("Count of Monte Cristo") starred, and "The Last of the Mohicans."

At Alexander Korda's London Films studios, activity is centered in the completion of two scripts by H. G. Wells—"One Hundred Years from Now" and "The Man Who Could Work Miracles." Edgar Wallace's "Sanders of the River," with Paul Robeson, Leslie Banks and Nina Mae McKinney, has just been completed and soon will be released.

At British and Dominions plant, Herbert Wilcox is at work on Alice Duer Miller's "Come Out of the Pantry," which will be Jack Buchanan's next starring vehicle. "Peg of Old Drury" goes before the cameras in two weeks. It will co-star Anna Neagle and Sir Cedric Hardwicke, who also will have the stellar roles in "Nell Gywn."

And then there is Walt Disney, who continues to make the Mickey Mouse productions and the Silly Symphonies, all of which bear the label of United Artists when they are released.

So, maybe, there isn't anything for Douglas Fairbanks to hurry back from the South Seas for, after all.

Speaking of Alexander Korda—who, with his wife, Maria Corda, once did a brief trick on the West Coast in this country—that latterly distinguished producer-director announces that he will make a film based on the life of the late Col. Lawrence, more specifically known to the world as "Lawrence of Arabia," official permission for which has been secured from the trustees of the famous adventurer's estate. Korda's plans call for a picture that not only will be an authentic chronicle of the career of a great man, but a fitting tribute as well to a statesman and soldier whose adventures have become imperishable history. It is a further part of the plan actually to film a great deal of the footage realistically "on location" in Arabia, where Col. Lawrence was known as "the uncrowned king."

History Repeats Itself.

Probably no one else in Washington but Melvin D. Hildreth, well-known Capital barrister and walking encyclopedia of information pertaining to the circus world, its people and historical background, is aware of the peculiar coincidence that attaches to the showing of the Johnny J. Jones Exposition, official midway attraction of the sixty-first annual conclave of the Ancient Arabic Order of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, on the grounds recently left vacant at the corner of Fourth street and Pennsylvania avenue.

It is relayed to me from my good friend, Mr. Hildreth, by Walt Nealand, veteran director of publicity for the Johnny Jones show, now counselled by E. Lawrence Phillips, local sportsman, motion-picture exhibitor and showman. Now if it were the other way 'round, that would be something else again.

But the fact seems to be this. The last show to exhibit on this particular site, Pennsylvania avenue at Fourth street, was the old Dan Rice Circus, which played on that exact spot in June, 1865. That was 70 years ago, two months after the assassination of President Lincoln in Ford's Opera House on Tenth street.

An Odd Coincidence.

Dan Rice in his heyday, of course, was rated the world's greatest clown. By an odd flip of fate, George Jennier, a great-nephew of Dan Rice's, is a clown with the Johnny Jones Exposition, a veteran whose parents were married while members of the Dan Rice Circus troupe. Jennier is with the Senior Bros. Circus, a Johnny Jones attraction.

Incidentally, the Johnny J. Jones Exposition seems to be the only show in town that is reaping any substantial box office benefit from the Shriners' convention. Mr. Nealand tells me they are doing much better business than was anticipated, although I suspect that last evening's gentle downpour proved no tonic whatever at the ticket wickets.

Now you know what it was like at that first Dempsey-Tunney fight up in Philadelphia on that diluvial night in September, 1926. An open grandstand is no place to be on such an evening. And neither is marching in a parade—especially if you are playing a double-bass tuba in a band. They hold an awful lot of water!

Tonight, the Arts Club of Washington will present Mildred Coleman in three original character studies of her own creation. Miss Coleman has been connected with the stage for ten years, having played here with Madge Kennedy in "Michael and Mary," and been cast with Fay Bainter in "The Man Who Changed His Name." Another feature of tonight's program will be "The Will of the Gods," a Japanese fantasy, presented by the junior group of the Clifford Brooke Academy, under the direction of Marie E. Walcott. Weather permitting, the program will be presented in the Arts Club's new Garden Theater.

Postman Rings Whole Chime!

A recent allusion here to Eddie, late lamented father of Charley Foy, who closes a week's engagement on the stage of Loew's Fox Theater tonight, in an ancient Dave Henderson production of "Ali Baba, or The Cave of the Forty Thieves," out in the Chicago Opera House in a windy village on the tip of Lake Michigan, occasioned an unexpected deluge of letters from old-timers, who still revere the memory of the theater's supreme clown.

Two of them are from veteran showmen, who never have lost their love of the playhouse—Leonard B. Schloss, vice president and general manager of the Glen Echo Park Co., and J. G. McFadden, an old trouper, who now lends his weight to keeping the postoffice of the War Department on an even keel.

Mr. McFadden shares something of my own enthusiasm for that remote day when the Henderson extravaganzas gave the theater such artists as Ida Mulle, Grace Henderson, the producer's wife; Albert Hart, Arthur and Jennie Dunn, Clara Belle Jerome and the rest, including, of course, Eddie Foy, not yet a star, but a very funny featured comedian.

Mr. Schloss, while lacking nothing in enthusiasm for the same remote era, wonders if I do not mean Aileen Crater, the present Mrs. Fred Stone, instead of Jessie Bartlett Davis, as prima donna of "Ali Babba," the first production in which the Foy humors rolled me in the aisle.

So It May Have Been Jessie.

To have played in the production to which I refer, I suspect Mrs. Stone would have to be a good deal older than she is. She was not yet a prima donna in "The Wizzard of Oz," which came along ten years later, but did sing the feminine lead with Montgomery and Stone in "The Old Town" in 1909, 1910 and 1911. My memory, furthermore, is pretty insistent in this matter because I happened to attend school in Chicago with two of Jessie Bartlett Davis' nieces—daughters of her brother, Lincoln Bartlett, for years Michigan avenue's smartest haberdasher out there on the lake front—and even if I had not heard her sing the role three or four times myself, these nieces would have seen to it that I didn't forget that "Aunt Jessie" was "in there." They entertained an affectionate enthusiasm for her and her work—and the handsome gifts she used to make them—that expressed itself in the voluble superlatives of the born press agent.

The Davis, whose wife Jessie Bartlett was, was Will J. Davis, former half owner of the ill-fated Columbia Theater on Monroe street in Chicago, which burned down one early morning three or four hours after a capacity audience had left it, and later was co-proprietor of the Illinois Theater, on Jackson boulevard, between Michigan and Wabash avenues, which was dedicated by Julia Marlowe in "When Knighthood Was in Flower."

Them was the days, eh, fellas?

It is that energetic Broadway scrivener on theatrical topics, Helen Hoerle, who calls my attention to the fact that while Gene Lockhart has gone places on the traditional stage he has not been so long before the cameras and, therefore, deserves credit and public mention for having himself such a busy time on the Coast. Mr. Lockhart was last seen on the local screen as Swayne, the butler, in "Star of Midnight," with William Powell and Ginger Rogers. He is now cast on the Fox lot in "Thunder in the Night," with Edmund Lowe and Karen Morley, and upon completion of that chore will move over to Universal City for "Storm Over the Andes," starring Jack Holt. Nice going.

Abject Apology Note.

It must have been that pesky groundhog again!

These Appear in Exotic Films

In "Oil for the Lamps of China," opening tomorrow on the screen at the Earle Theater, the principal male role is played by Pat O'Brien, looking a little disturbed, as the part demands, when he was snapped for the likeness appearing above at left. At right above is that blonde beauty, Ketti Gallian, as she reveals an engaging profile opposite Warner Baxter in "Under the Pampas Moon," the serio-comic tale of an Argentine gaucho, coming tomorrow to the screen at Loew's Fox Theater, where Henry Armetta will be on the stage.

The undertaking is a continuation of such work started three years ago in which a score of the blind students were all helped, nine so much that they were able to leave the school here and go to the public schools.

The work will be done free by Dr. J. E. Blaydes, Bluefield surgeon. The State Welfare Department is paying hospital expenses of the patients. Three years ago the project was financed by the Lions clubs of the State and they voted at their convention this year to continue some assistance.

Picture Houses Announce Bills To Open Friday

Film Plays and Parks Are in Control of Field as Even Burlesk Closes.

(Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.)

Warner Baxter will return to the screen at Loew's Fox Theater tomorrow in an item bearing the title of "Under the Pampas Moon," a film play of the Argentine, in which he is said to have a more picturesque and romantic role than in "In Old Arizona," the first outdoor, all-talking picture, wherein he established the popularity of the Cisco kid. Mr. Baxter will be supported in this genial enterprise by Ketti Gallian, John Miljan, Carroll Naish, Jack La Rue and Veloz and Yolanda, the famous dancers. The stage bill will be headlined by Henry Armetta, Italian dialect comedian, in person. Others on the vaudeville program will include Lester Allen and Nellie Breen, the Jans and Lynton Dancing Revue and Beehee and Rubyatte Saharane, acrobats. Fox Movietone News and Phil Lampkin's orchestral numbers will be added.

"Oil for the Lamps of China" is the screen feature announced for the week beginning tomorrow at the Earle Theater. Pat O'Brien and Josephine Hutchinson are to be seen in the featured roles, supported by Lyle Talbot, Jean Muir, John Eldredge and Arthur Byron. The story is a film adaptation of the novel of the same name by Alice Tisdale Hobart and has its locale in China, as the title implies. That youthful and sprightly, Mitzi Mayfair, will headline the stage portion of the entertainment in a series of her incomparable dances assisted by Bobby Baxter. Other acts will include Raphael, concertina soloist; the Stewart Sisters and the Delcos, "high fliers." Newsreel and Freddy Clark's orchestral overture, with Bert Granoff back as vocal soloist, will complete the bill.

• • • •

Gene Raymond, Ann Sothern, Bill "Bojangles" Robinson, Marie Gambarelli and Pert Kelton are the principals in RKO-Radio's latest musical screen play, "Hooray for Love," announced as the major attraction on the screen at RKO-Keith's Theater for the week beginning tomorrow. This production boasts song numbers by Dorothy Fields and Jimmy McHugh, whose tunes never have failed to click. A chorus of handsome young women is said to be an important factor in filling the eye. The bill will be rounded out by short sound subjects of varied appeal and a new release of the Pathe News, depicting the week's important events the world over.

• • • •

Wiley Post, famous round-the-world flier, makes his screen debut in "Air Hawks," the Columbia picture scheduled to open a week's engagement at the Metropolitan Theater tomorrow. The story deals with a death ray that can cause destruction from any distance and is used by a competitor of a commercial air line to bring down its planes. Ralph Bellamy, Tala Birell, Douglas Dumbrille and Billie Seward are the principals in the cast. Polly Moran in "Pretty Polly," "Broadway Highlights," a new variety reel, and full 15-minute newsreel also are scheduled.

• • • •

The first of the Russian musical screen farces to reach the local public will open a week's engagement at the Belasco Theater tomorrow, when "Moscow Laughs" will succeed the eminently successful "The Unfinished Symphony" as the bill's chief feature. Not only is "Moscow Laughs" a musical comedy, it is a jazz musical comedy and, according to report, one of the jazziest ever made. The picture, whose cast is unknown by name to American audiences, scored a hit in Paris and ran a month on Broadway. It will be supplemented by the usual list of short sound subjects and Pathe News.

• • • •

Will Rogers, with Billie Burke leading the support, will continue a second week on the screen at Loew's Palace Theater in "Doubting Thomas," the Fox picturization of George Kelly's comedy of "The Torch Bearers," poking fun at those who engage in amateur theatricals. Sterling Halloway, Gail Patrick and Frances Grant are other important members of the cast. The subsidiary films also will be held over.

Mae West will continue "Goin' to Town" on the screen at the Columbia, beginning tomorow, thus reviving on F street her recent successful fortnight's run at the Palace. In this story of the West, Argentina and Long Island, the star is supported by Paul Cavanagh, Fred Kohler, Grant Withers and a huge cast. News events, comedy and other screen subjects will complete the program.

Visiting nobles and potentates in Washington for Shrine Week are satisfying their thrist for hilarious entertainment by enjoying the 50-odd amusements provided at Glen Echo Park, the Capital's outdoor amusement center. The Crystal Pool, Spanish Garden Ballroom and all of the myriad park diversions are coming in for their full play between the hours of 9:30 a. m. and 11:30 p. m. All of these, of course, will continue in operation throughout the summer.

Millers' Group Wants to Tax 'Pseudo-Co-ops'

Serious Competition in Grain Purchases Cited by Association.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., June 13.—Members of the Piedmont Millers Association, at the opening of their eleventh annual convention here today, said they planned action to have Virginia and North Carolina levy taxes on "pseudo cooperatives" operating in the two States.

An official of the association said that these "co-operative" groups are competing seriously with millers in the purchase of grain and in other ways, and said the association would urge the States to put upon them levies equal to general industrial taxes.

Ranking in importance with this topic of discussion was that of the "plight" of millers in Southern and Eastern States, who are confronted with what was described as "the dumping of cheap Pacific-Northwestern wheat" on markets of this area.

The delegates from seven States and the District of Columbia said they would ask that the Federal Government revive the Pacific-Northwest Emergency Export Corporation, which formerly sold surplus grain in Orient. Suspension of this corporation's activities was held partially responsible for the "dumping" on Eastern markets.

President Carl Sherill, of Statesville, N. C., association president, today welcomed the millers from Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, the District of Columbia, West Virginia, Tennessee, North Carolina and South Carolina.

Approximately 300 other persons from industries allied with milling also were expected to register at the two-day convention, which will carry on a great deal of its business behind closed doors.

O. C. Dorman, president of the Pacific - Northwest Emergency Corporation, and A. J. S. Weaver, of the Division of grain of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, were among the speakers.

Annapolis Railway Put on Block Today

Bus Service Likely From Washington.

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, June 13.—With bondholders making determined last-minute attempts to salvage portions of the line, plans for the auction here tomorrow of the Washington, Baltimore & Annapolis Railroad Co. were complete tonight.

The sale will be held by Louis J. Burger, of Baltimore, at the door of the courthouse. Burger, who was named special master for the disposal, will offer the company's properties in 13 parts, one of which is the Annapolis Short Line, running between Baltimore and Annapolis.

Negotiations by bondholders of the Short Line to purchase the spur and rehabilitate it with modern equipment and first-class service were still in process today, but it was deemed unlikely that rail service on the South Shore Line and into Washington will be continued.

Bus transportation was seen as the probable solution in the event service finally is discontinued between Washington and Annapolis.

Under a ruling by the State Public Service Commission, the W., B. & A. may continue operation until September 15, 1935, but it was believed here that official steps to abandon the line would be taken near the end of July.

One bus application already has been filed with the commission, and it was expected several others will be filed when tomorrow's auction is completed.

Braddock Jolts Fight World, Defeating Baer's Title on Points

This Morning...

With Shirley Povich

AMONG the things I am not taking for my text this morning is the Baer-Braddock fight. I dimly recall having forecast that Mr. Baer would drape Mr. Braddock over the subway entrance three blocks away from the Long Island City ring. It was just a case of mixed identities, I guess.

POVICH.

"I don't believe it," said Clark Griffith when he read a dispatch from Chicago wherein Manager Bucky Harris was quoted as giving up hope that the Nats would win the pennant. It's well that Griffith doesn't believe it because if Harris has made that statement, and if Griffith had believed that he had made it, there would be a new Washington manager today.

Before tomorrow night the Washington Club and every other team in the league, for that matter, must bolster its lineup by trades with other big league clubs, or be content to add strength from the minors thereafter. The deadline on trades sets in at midnight, June 15.

Griffith is attempting to make one more trade before the limit expires. He is currently engaged in attempting to buy Jack Knott, a big right-handed pitcher, from the Browns, but he is shying at the $20,000 that the Browns are asking. Who wouldn't.

The Red Sox won a double-header from Cleveland the other day with Joe Cronin out of their line-up. A few more performances like that and the owner of the Boston Club will begin to get ideas. But with his five-year contract at $30,000 per annum, any sympathy for Cronin is more or less wasted.

The late and lamented members of the Royal and Ancient Club, which is the governing body at St. Andrews, doubtless are turning in their mausoleums today with the report that Sid Brews, the South African pro, has been admitted to the British Open despite his late entry. In matters of this kind the Royal and Ancient in the past has been about as unyielding as a steel girder.

When Bucky Harris was introduced at a banquet here recently, he was given a glowing send-off by the master of ceremonies, who, in closing, remarked that win, lose or draw, he would always support Manager Harris or his successors. Harris grinned as he rose to speak. "Don't pay any attention to that last crack," he began. "I don't want any successors here."

But if Clark Griffith is ever casting about for managerial timber on his ball club, he has a likely manager at hand in Capt. Buddy Myer. Myer often beats Harris to the protest on umpires' decisions and is a close student of baseball. He also plays rather well.

Promoter Joe Turner actually went into the red on the Canzoneri-Klick fight which the Shriners failed to support. Despite the fact that the fight drew $24,000, Turner can count among his setbacks the loss of profits on the weekly wrestling matches before the fight and during the fight week, which he canceled in deference to the Shrine show.

Big Bill Tilden, who has never been famous for leaving unsaid anything that is on his mind, especially when he can take a rap at the United States Lawn Tennis Association, gladly gave his opinion on America's chances in the 1935 Davis Cup matches. "They are exactly nil," he said at the Kenwood Club yesterday.

To hear Tilden tell it, the United States won't even get by Australia in the interzone play, and young Vivian McGrath will beat Sidney Wood and Wilmer Allison. In rebuttal, it is not hard to recall that the Davis Cup committee refused Tilden's offer to coach the United States team without thanks.

Name your lad James J. if you want him to grow up to be the heavyweight champion of the world. James J. Corbett did it and so did James J. Jeffries. And now it's James J. Braddock. Who said what's in a name? If Shakespeare was asking about James J., the answer's easy. The heavyweight championship's in it.

Round-by-Round Fight Details

By the Associated Press.

ROUND ONE.

Baer, instead of rushing, backed carefully away and Braddock hammered two rights to his side. The champion sneered as Braddock whipped a left hook to the head but missed a long right. Braddock took a short right uppercut to the chin, but smashed a hard right to the chin. Max missed a left hook to the head and took two left hooks on the chin as the crowd cheered the challenger's amazingly fine start. Twice Braddock jabbed Baer's head with lefts before digging a hard right into Baer's head. Neatly Braddock speared the champion's head with lefts, then pounded his body with rights as the champion waited for an opening. Baer was blinking at the bell. It was Braddock's round by a wide margin.

ROUND TWO.

Baer danced out and Braddock popped him twice with lefts to the head. Baer laughed and posed as Braddock shot three lefts to the head and a right to the body. Braddock outjabbed Baer with a half dozen lefts and knocked the champion's head back with a right uppercut. Baer cut loose for the first time, with a two-fisted barrage to the body, but Braddock slugged right back. Braddock stabbed Baer's head with lefts, then crossed three full rights to the chin. Max clowned, danced and laughed as he missed a long right to the head. The champion slapped Braddock in friendly fashion on the shoulder as the bell rang. Braddock's round.

ROUND THREE.

ROUND FOUR.

Braddock stabbed three lefts to the champion's head. Baer drilled both hands into Braddock's body as they clinched. Baer nearly wrestled Braddock off his feet and the crowd booed. Baer raised both hands apologetically to the crowd. Baer shot two rights to the side, caught Braddock with a right uppercut, but Jimmy stabbed back with a left and made the champion bend. Braddock took a hard right to the chin against the ropes, the best blow Baer had landed. A long right to the cheek knocked Braddock to the ropes, but he tore back with a right to the body as the bell sounded. It was Baer's round by a shade.

ROUND FIVE.

Baer lazily came to midring as Braddock again jabbed his head with a half dozen lefts. Baer tore madly to close quarters, hammering both hands into the challenger's sides. A hard right bounced off Braddock's chin, but Jimmy tore back with two rights to the head. They stabbed slowly in midring and Baer was warned for backhanding. Baer landed three right-hand uppercuts, drove a hard right to Braddock's body and complained Jimmy's right was low. Punching madly, Baer tore after the challenger, landed two long rights to the head, but took a half dozen full smashes to the chin in return. Baer nailed his challenger with a right to the temple. Referee McAvoy awarded the round to Braddock for backhanding.

ROUND SIX.

Baer ripped into Braddock with a half dozen short rights to the head. He split Braddock's nose with a right uppercut. Braddock stabbed two lefts into the champion's head. Baer threw a long right into Jimmy's head and Braddock smashed back with both hands, rocking the champion's head with a volley of rights. Baer nailed Braddock with a half dozen short uppercuts, but Braddock stabbed him with lefts. Braddock wavered under Baer's furious attack. Blood streamed from Braddock's nose, but the challenger was punching even with the big champion at the bell. It was Baer's round.

ROUND SEVEN.

Baer tore into Braddock, but the challenger popped him with a half dozen left jabs. Braddock shot a left and right to Baer's head, poked his face with a half dozen more lefts before falling in close to pound Baer's body. Baer shook the challenger with a half dozen right uppercuts and two right smashes to the head. Braddock wabbled, but stabbed back gamely with his left and the champion hammered another left to the head. Jimmy shook his head, smashed a long right to the stinct," but he more than matched the old champion in courage and sheer fighting urge.

The small crowd, estimated at 30,000, sat through the first five rounds hoping against hope as the new champion had things pretty much his own way.

This Was the Moment.

In the sixth Baer unleashed his attack. Here was the moment the crowd had been waiting for, but hoping would never arrive. The mighty man-killer would pound the poor little feller fighting for his wife and kids into the rosin dust with the two murderous bludgeons humorously called fists.

From the sixth until the eleventh, the defending titleholder did everything he ever thought of in a ring and the moment for Braddock to bite the dust seemed always at hand. The Jersey Irishman tired, he seemed destined to fall over from sheer exhaustion—but he didn't.

In the seventh, Baer's mighty right crashed over in a long overhand blow to the head. It was the defender's first clean shot with his starboard flipper. He followed it with another—and Jim stayed right side up. In those two blows lies the story of the fight. After they landed, Madcap Maxie won four more rounds, but the fire, the snap was gone from him. He was strained, tense—the Baer of the first few minutes of the Carnera fight who changed to the happy, carefree clown after the knock.

Braddock seemed to sense the difference in his opponent. He became more confident. He took more pot shots, ramming home hard right and lefts which sent the Livermore Larruper's kinky head bobbing like a head bobbing for apples. The long shot, the 10 to 1 under dog, the man whom everyone said would be carried or led from the ring in a round or two if he managed to survive the introductions, had come into his own.

With the title and a million dollars slipping, in fact having slipped, Baer clowned and waited, letting Braddock set the pace in the fourteenth round. With just six minutes to save everything he had fought for, this strange creature, this big creature, who is half man-killer and half child, stood with his hands down, letting the fleeting minutes which meant thousands of dollars fly away.

In the fifteenth the loser spurted—but that it was too late was apparent to all in the arena.

The hero of the rags-to-riches romance which was written here functioned perfectly throughout almost the entire fight. He kept poking Baer with a long, left jab, crossing occasion rights which sent Baer's head back, but seldom had him in trouble. At close range, Baer was the master. He had trained for a body attack—as had

Brews' British Golf Entry Is Accepted

Ruling Body Unbends and Changes Decision.

By the Associated Press.

St. Andrews, Scotland, June 13.—Henry Gullen, secretary of the Royal and Ancient Club, ruling body of golf in Great Britain, today announced Sid Brews' entry in the British Open championship starting at Muirfield, June 24, had been accepted.

In a decision that shattered all precedents, the R. and A. reversed itself in granting Brews, South African champion and runner-up in the British Open last year, permission to play.

The R. and A. had announced on Monday that Brews would not be eligible for this year's championship because no entry from him had been received. Brews replied that his entry had been posted from South Africa before he failed to compete in the American Open at Pittsburgh last week.

Chisox Stage 9-Run Fifth; Rout Nats

Hadley Pounded in Big Frame and Suffers 10-6 Setback.

By Lewis F. Archison,
A Staff Correspondent.

CHICAGO, June 13.—A small mob of Chicago hoodlums, identified by the police as the White Sox gang, notorious Southside characters, held up the Washington Senators and relieved them of a 10-6 decision this afternoon at Comiskey Park.

The hold-up occurred in plain view of several thousand Chicago citizens who displayed an utter disregard for law and order by cheering every move of the Sox, and groaned in dismay when for a brief period in the first few innings, it seemed as though the victims possibly might escape. The fact that it was the third consecutive happening of its kind in as many days only added to the citizens' cheer.

The visiting firemen were afforded little protection by Big Bump Hadley, a ponderous chap instrusted with the safety of a slim one-run lead garnered by his mates in the first inning. In fact, grave suspicions arose concerning Hadley's intentions in the fifth when run-pilfering was at its height.

Leon Pettit, a little fellow with a lot of courage—he needed it against the toughies—and a curve like a bent elbow, came to the Senators' rescue, and after being shoved around a bit in the waning stages of the fatal fifth, finished in good style.

Luke Sewell, former Washington resident now with Chicago, wielded one of the most potent bludgeons in the attack, and was directly responsible for the fifth inning outburst that knocked the Nationals bowlegged. Sewell batted twice in the inning, got two hits and scored twice. Every Chicagoan but Radcliff scored during the disturbance.

A home run by Zeke Bonura with two pals waiting for him on the bases, singles by Simmons, Appling and Piet, a lusty double off Kennedy's bat, a pass to Hopkins and a wild pitch by Pettit, figured in the melee. It was all very discouraging, and to make matters worse

Pitts Case Represents Whole Attitude Toward Ex-Convicts

By Paul Gallico.
A Special Correspondent.

NEW YORK, June 13.—The case of Alabama Pitts, the former Sing Sing athlete, who was denied a chance to play on the Albany Baseball Club, has drifted along in the regular routine manner, as everyone expected. There was no chance that the minor league committee would have the courage or the initiative to reverse the ruling of their president, Judge Bramham. I suppose that is why they are minor leaguers instead of major leaguers. It is now up to Judge Landis who, in his day, was a good, sound, go-to-hell-for-a-principle kind of guy, and if I know the gentleman, still is. Honesty, fair play and public decency are a fair passion with the old judge. I expect a lot from him. And a lot of courage will be needed on his part if he is to reverse a decision of men who, in a manner of speaking, are his employers. I like that fiery old guy with the thatch of white hair and burning indignant eyes. I hope he doesn't throw me down.

Warden Lawes of Sing Sing recently sent me a wire. The gist of it was that if he didn't count, Alabama Pitts didn't count. But civilization and social justice did. It is not the individual fate of Pitts that is at stake. They say that he isn't much of a ball player and wouldn't last on as good a minor league club as Albany, which is in the circuit just below the major leagues. But the burden of proof here is on Pitts. If he fails he, at least, had his chance, and that chance would leave him with a friendlier feeling toward the society from which he once outlawed himself.

Perhaps the following letter will explain more clearly what I mean. It is dated:

"Somewhere in Brooklyn,
"Ex-Convict No. ——,
"June 9.
"Dear Mr. Gallico:

"When I was a kid the only playgrounds I ever played in were the stinking back yards of the tenements in New York. The cops never bothered breaking up our crap games, as there always another one down the other end of the block.

"The first time we saw a dead man on the sidewalk we were

Fredericksburg Elks Defeat Culpeper Nine

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Culpeper, Va., June 13.—Culpeper Athletic Club, leaders in the Valley League, suffered their first defeat of the season here this afternoon when the Fredericksburg Elks in an exhibition game won by a 8 to 2 score. Garvey for the Elks, did not issue a free pass, allowed seven hits and received perfect support.

Four successive Culpeper errors in the eighth with one away put two across without a single, to offset the five safeties granted. Culpeper's runs came in the seventh with two away when a home run by Brown, a triple by Metheny and singles by Lacy and Lowery. Double plays in both the eighth and ninth cut Culpeper rallies short.

Tilden Loses Match and Argument

Tennis Almost Postponed By Good Weather; Play at Kenwood Today.

By John R. Vosburgh.

BIG BILL TILDEN, who once hoped to become a great actor, gave a performance in several acts yesterday at the Kenwood Country Club which would have made Edwin Booth give up the stage in sheer perplexity. In a moody display which ended semi-tragically as the 42-year-old tennis master bowed to Martin Plaa, machine-like French professional, 5—7, 6—4, 6—4, Tilden engaged in verbal fireworks for a steady two hours before and during the match which had everybody, from the spectators to his own promoters, flabbergasted, at the finish.

Tilden was extremely put out, to put it mildly, upon his arrival here to find that the matches scheduled for yesterday had been postponed until either today or Sunday. The whole situation was finally cleared up by the promoters persuading Tilden to play both yesterday and this afternoon at 4:30.

Tilden will play Bob Ramillion, young French professional ace, and he and Al Chapin, former first-tenranker, will meet Plaa and Ramillion in doubles. Due to the misunderstanding as to the date of the matches, only a handful of spectators attended yesterday's matches. Among the spectators was Alexander Troyanovsky, Russian Ambassador to the United States. The chunky little envoy posed with Tilden for pictures and seemed to get a great deal of amusement out of the exhibition.

Tilden was in something of a temper shortly after his arrival.

"Has everybody gone crazy around this place?" he demanded of Messrs. Fried and Fishman, of Philadelphia.

Mrs. Moody Rests; Faces Test Today

3 Top English Players Gain Kent Semifinals.

By the Associated Press.

London, June 13.—Three of England's four top-ranking women tennis players joined Helen Wills Moody in the semifinals of the Kent Tournament today and thus assured the Californian of two successive days of the most strenuous competition she yet has encountered in her comeback campaign.

While Helen, a round ahead of the field, rested in her hotel, Dorothy Round, England's No. 1; Katherine Stammers, No. 3, and Mrs. Phyllis Mudford King, No. 4, all won their quarter-final round matches in straight sets. Mrs. Moody, if she defeats Miss Stammers tomorrow, probably will have to meet Miss Round, the British champion, in the finals Saturday.

Nats to Train In Florida Next Year

Biloxi, Site Since 1929, Deserted for Orlando in Citrus Country.

Weather and Proximity to Major Clubs Are Factors in Choice.

By Shirley Povich.

BILOXI, Miss., has been abandoned by the Washington Ball Club as its spring training site and the team will set up its preseason quarters in Orlando, Fla., next year.

The move of the Nats from the Shrimp Coast on the Gulf of Mexico to the center of Florida's citrus fruit industry was announced yesterday by Owner Clark Griffith, who signed a one-year contract with Orlando city officials.

The bearer of the contract on which Griffith affixed his signature was John Ganzel, former teammate of the Nats' owner when Griffith played with and managed the New York Highlanders in 1903-04. Other members of that team were the famed Hal Chase, Jack Chesbro and Kid Elberfeld.

Ganzel, now a wine merchant in Orlando, represented the city chamber of commerce and other civic bodies.

Deserted by Dodgers.

Orlando was deserted by the Brooklyn Dodgers as a training camp after the conclusion of last spring's campaign when the Brooklyn club learned that the city officials were making overtures to the New York Giants to train there in 1936. The Giants had been offered a greater guarantee than the city had been paying Brooklyn, and the Dodgers announced their withdrawal with great umbrage.

Griffith refused to divulge the money guarantee that the city is paying the Washington Club, but it is reported to be $4,000, slightly less than was offered the Giants.

Situated about 40 miles inland from Florida's West Coast, Orlando is a city of 35,000 population in the thick of the State's citrus fruit industry. It is the county seat of Orange County, which is dotted with 1,000 lakes, and the fact that it is inland, removed from the winds, was an important factor in Griffith's acceptance of the terms.

Unlike Biloxi, Orlando is not off the beaten track of barnstorming big league ball teams. In the Mississippi town, the Washington Club encountered difficulty in scheduling the big league opposition necessary to complete its training, but in Orlando the club will be within a half day's traveling distance of Bradenton, where the Cardinals train; Sarasota, where the Red Sox are situated; St. Petersburg, headquarters of the Braves and Giants, and Lakeland, spring home of the Tigers. The Reds are at Tampa, 100 miles away.

According to Ganzel, who admitted to the influences of his civic pride, the Dodgers have lost only

Wise Money, $4.40 Favorite, Wins Charles Town Sprint Race

Fans Collect Daily Double Of $72.80

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

CHARLES TOWN, W. Va., June 13.—Five thousand turfites, who sweltered on the hottest day of the year, got some solace out of Charlie Rector's Wise Money winning the five-eighths of the fourth, looked upon as the best offering of a featureless card.

Although opposing seven of the fleetest sprinters on the grounds, Wise Money drew the bulk of the support in the "iron men" presided over by Leo Sechle, to sprint the distance in 1:00 4-5 and pay the short price of $4.40.

Starter Red Palmer sent the field of eight away in alignment. Trylubria, with Wise Money at his throat latch, sped the first quarter in :0:23 and the half in 0:47 3-5, which "cooked" Trylubria.

Wise Money was still full of run at this stage and rushed to the top to win in hand from Edyth M., one that closed gamely from a slow beginning. Trylubria, although tiring, barely managed to outlast Red Riot for the show award.

Daily Double Pays $72.80.

The "daily double" players collected $72.80 when Moramour scored in the opener and Canteret took the third race honors.

The start of the day's half-mile opener was held up 15 minutes when Genie Palatine, after going on the track, refused to budge. It was necessary to tie her tongue down after giving her a severe whipping before she would trot postward. She broke with her field, but wound up last, the winner turning up in E. Pike's Moramour, a first-time starter.

Moramour was lucky to find an opening at the stretch turn to take command and was all out to win from Berry Patch, with Petee Lad showing the way to the others.

LULU LITE steadied along within striking distance of the pace for the first 3 furlongs, moved up steadily thereafter, came to the outside of the leader in the stretch, wore down DOVE OF PEACE after passing the furlong pole and just lasted to stave off WEE TUNE. The latter, well placed early, dropped back after swinging from the back stretch, and finishing stoutly through the stretch. DOVE OF PEACE hustled to the front, weakened in the closing drive. MACK SENNETT displayed good speed for the first half mile, tiring thereafter. BOBBY BUXTON unable to reach the leaders. CASH SURRENDER never prominent.

SASSABY went to the front in the opening strides, drew away into a long lead and was never threatened, winning with speed to spare. PANBULA, forwardly placed throughout, continued with good energy to the close. APPOMATTOX, unable to keep the pace early, obtained clear sailing on the inside all the last five-sixteenths and closed gamely. JUBAL showed good speed and followed the winner closest. CARDAMON, away slowly, was much used in gaining a contending position, was unable to make up ground in the drive. CHEROKEE SAL in close quarters in the run through the back stretch, finished in determined fashion.

ON OUR WAY showed speed from the start, withstood determined opposition for the first quarter mile, drew away but had to be hard ridden to hold on long enough. STEPAWAY fought it out for the lead with the winner, dropped back midway of the turn, but coming again in the stretch, was taking the winner at every stride at the end. VEE EIGHT, well placed and saving all possible ground, responded willingly and closed stoutly. PRYOR, away well, kicked speed to keep up. JUDGE SCHILLING, unable to reach the leaders, weakened under his impost in the closing quarter mile.

SANDY MACK, away in front in the opening stages, drew clear in the first furlong and rated along in front, held on well but was unable to cope with the superior late speed of the winner. ZOWIE, away well and well placed all the way, was unable to improve her position when placed under punishment.

ACCOLADE, rallied back soon after the start, worked his way up steadily and closed with good energy. THE DARB, outrun early, came gamely into the stretch and got up right at the end to take third from CHARACTER. The latter, much used in racing with the winner, weakened in the last three-sixteenths. CUTIE PACE displayed speed from the start, fought it out with the leader, drew clear after passing the furlong pole and held THOMASVILLE safe at the end. The latter, rated along in pursuit of the pace, closed gamely in the stretch. COHORT MISS, a trailer for the first 6 furlongs, closed willingly through the last three-sixteenths. BALIOS, much used in racing with the winner, stopped badly in the last sixteenth.

KOW TOW, benefited by her light impost, was reserved in back of the pace, moved up on the inside approaching the back stretch, took command after passing the furlong pole and, despite bearing to the outside in the stretch, held safe. FIRE REEL, a trailer for the first half mile, began moving up steadily thereafter and, closing fast on the outside, was overhauling the winner at every stride at the end. MANTADOS, reserved early, responded gamely to pressure through the last quarter mile. IMMUNE displayed good speed in pace making, but faltered badly in the last sixteenth. ADVOCATE JUNIOR, forced early pace, weakened in the last furlong.

MOMO, a trailer for the first 5 furlongs, moved up steadily thereafter, came to the outside in the stretch and, wearing down the leaders was going away at the end. BUNGALOW had the most speed from the start, was in back of the pace, moved up stoutly midway of the turn, took command and despite holding gamely was not good enough. MATHIAS displayed speed throughout and held on gamely as usual in the drive. JEANNE S. was well up all the way. GRACIAS was in close quarters inside the last sixteenth. APPLE FRITTER never prominent. NIMULE had early speed.

Four District Golfers Qualify in Middle Atlantic Tournament

Hufty Joins Top Flight Players

Webb Among Stars Who Fail to Survive in Medal Contest.

By Dave Herman.
A Staff Correspondent.

VIRGINIA BEACH, Va., June 13.—A quartet of Washington golfers made the grade in the Middle Atlantic golf championship which ended its two-day qualifying round today over the pine-infested and picturesque Princess Anne course, a course the great Walter Hagen once said was one of the most beautiful in the country.

The District qualifiers are Dr. Larry Otell, of Congressional, with 73; Levi Yoder, of Indian Spring, with 76; Walter R. McCallum, Washington Golf and Country Club, 76, and Page Hufty, of Chevy Chase, with 79.

Dr. Otell tied for the medal with Ernie Caldwell, of Baltimore, 1932 Middle Atlantic title holder, and Frank Sutton, young Richmond star, each of whom made his two-over-par score in the opening round Wednesday. They will play off for the qualifying prize Sunday.

Pace Is Slower.

Today's golfing was dismal, as compared to yesterday's, when 14 out of 50 cracked 80 and earned qualifying berths. Today only two were able to shoot in the seventies, one of them being the blond Hufty, former North and South amateur champion, who played his round cold, teeing off just a few minutes after he arrived at the course on a boat trip from Washington. Without so much as a practice tour to his credit, Hufty banged out a 41-38—79, a birdie on the home hole being the margin by which he qualified.

Some 35 Washingtonians out of a field of 90 players from two States and the District made valiant attempts to qualify, and there were some dejected fellows tonight.

Tommy Webb, jr., of Washington Golf and Country Club, who knocks 'em a mile off the tee, looked like a sure thing to get in after nine holes when he went in 39, four over par. Along the stretch he played like a wild man with his woods and irons, and three-putted several greens to wind up with 44. The former University of Maryland star had four strokes too many.

Putts With Driver.

Two Indian Spring stars, Dr. Howard L. Smith, and Louis Fuchs, flunked out, the former with 82, the latter with 85. The greens gave Fuchs so much trouble that after he passed the eighth hole he putted with his driver—of all things—and did remarkably well.

Two former Kenwood club champions, tall bespectacled Charlie Cole, and Maury Fitzgerald, the latter 1933 Middle Atlantic semi-finalist, shot themselves out of the championship. Cole started with an 8 but rallied for an 80. Six on the 18th hole cost him a place in the select circle of 16. Fitzgerald was way off form.

Juddy Heron and Frank Williams, hot golfers around their home course, Washington, had 85 and 86, respectively, a few bad holes blasting their chances. Reeves Lewis, jr., of Chevy Chase, saw his score skyrocket to 92. Jim Tracey, of Washington, finished the last few holes nicely, and shot an 81.

Two Champions Play.

The field is the fastest and strongest in history, with two former champions, Billy Howell, of Richmond, winner in 1930 and 1931, and Caldwell ready to regain their lost laurels. But the 1934 champion, Bob Riegel, the 19-year-old Richmond boy, who bested Washington's Roger Peacock in the final last season, has been relegated to the second flight, because he was guilty of 80 strokes yesterday.

What beat many of the Washington golfers today and the other prospective qualifiers was the fact that they went out with the idea of beating the mark of 73. They were pressing at every turn, playing chance shots instead of playing carefully.

Young Don Miller, of Baltimore, squeezed in with his 79 today, after going out in 39. He had to shoot carefully in the home hole to get this score.

Virginians dominated the championship flight, nine being from the Old Dominion. Three are from Baltimore and the rest from Washington.

Yoder Conceded Chance.

Levi Yoder, the transplanted North Carolinian, appears to have the best chance of the District hopefuls. Winner of the Manor Invitation tournament a few weeks ago, Yoder shot a 76 yesterday, with a 36 on the first nine. He is hitting the ball with lots of stuff, as is evidenced by a sub-par 70 he scored in a practice round late this evening.

Billy Howell, who faces Ed Semmler, of Baltimore, apparently is hitting his shots as he did a few years ago, when he cleaned up everything in this section and went on to the semi-finals of the National Amateur. Howell was well pleased with his 74 of the qualifying round. A battle between Billy and his kid brother, Tommy, is in prospect for the quarter-finals.

Nats Crushed By Chisox, 10 to 6

Hadley and Pettit Fail to Hold Chicago; Sewell Paces Winners.

"Blind Brick" Owens, who still is carried on the rolls as an umpire, rendered no decision that could be used as an alibi.

Nats Get Most Hits.

But the Nats were in there fighting, as Joe Cronin fearlessly would say. They outhit the hoodlums, 14 to 12, although Vernon Kennedy, pitching for Chicago, managed to hold them on base when danger threatened.

Two guys Vernon failed to hold were Jake Powell, who poked a home run into the left field stands in the sixth with Travis on second, and Buddy Myer, who followed suit in the seventh with the merry-go-round empty.

Again in the ninth the Senators opened up with a two-fisted punching attack that threatened to repair the damage already done but it was a short-lived rally, and very much short of tying the score. Heinie Manush, who remained on the bench because of a bad toe, came out swinging his bat in business-like fashion and threatening to send all of the Sox home with cracked heads. But the only thing the big Dutchman cracked was a liner to center which Al Simmons nabbed for the final putout.

Stone Starts It.

Stone opened the ninth with a single to right and reached second when Buddy Myer drew a walk. Travis forced Myer at second, Stone moving over to third. Schulte lined out to Simmons in center, scoring Stone. Schulte prolonged the rally with a single to right, and Bolton gave it further impetus with another single to the same spot scoring Travis. Manush, batting for Bluege, appeared on the scene at this juncture and drove the final putout to Simmons.

Washington scored its first run in the opening inning on successive singles by Kuhel and Stone and Myer's double. Powell's home run accounted for the next two, and Myer's blast for the fourth.

Chicago's first came in the fourth inning when with two down Hadley passed Bonura and Simmons, and Appling singled to right.

Tomorrow it will be Jack Russell for Washington, against Carl Fischer for the Sox—maybe.

Frisch Is Fined $50; Suspended for 2 Days

New York, June 13 (AP).—Frankie Frisch, manager of the world champion St. Louis Cardinals, was fined $50 and suspended for two days by Ford C. Frick, president of the National League, today for Frisch's run-in with Umpire J. W. Sears in Boston yesterday.

In the sixth inning of the first game of the Cardinals-Braves double-header, Sears banished Frisch for protesting too vehemently a decision at first base.

Indians Defeat A's to End Slump

Hildebrand Pitches Team to 6-3 Victory, Stops Rally.

By the Associated Press.

CLEVELAND, June 13.—Oral Hildebrand pulled the Cleveland Indians and himself out of a slump today by defeating the Philadelphia Athletics, 6 to 3.

The Indians had lost four straight and it was Hildebrand's first victory since May 20.

The Athletics looked good for a rally in the eighth, when Higgins, third baseman, smacked a homer to score Foxx, first baseman, whom Hildebrand had walked, but the Cleveland pitcher then settled down.

The Indians touched Vernon Wilshere for 13 hits until he was replaced by Caster after Cleveland had scored three runs in the sixth inning.

Bridges Stops Boston For 9th Straight Win

By the Associated Press.

DETROIT, June 13.—Tommy Bridges pitched the Detroit Tigers to a 6-1 victory over the Boston Red Sox today and at the same time stretched his winning streak to nine straight games. It was his 10th victory of the season to three defeats.

The Tigers got to three Red Sox hurlers for 11 hits, one of them Hank Greenberg's 14th home run of the season. Rhodes, who started for Boston, lasted until the seventh when he was yanked after Tommy Bridges doubled with one out. The Tigers promptly fell on Rube Walberg for two hits, which, with Melillo's first error and a long fly, brought in four runs.

Detroit piled up two more runs in the eighth on three singles and Melillo's second error. The Boston run came in the fourth when Almada tripled and scored on Miller's fly.

Bridges held the Sox to eight well distributed hits and allowed only three walks.

Nats Take Florida Camp Next Spring

one hour of training in two years at Orlando due to bad weather.

The Orlando Park, counted among the best in Florida, was built 12 years ago by the Cincinnati Reds and boasts a commodious clubhouse with grandstand seats for 3,500.

Washington has trained at Biloxi since 1929, the first year of Walter Johnson's regime as manager. Not until last season when rain cramped the training of the club during the first three weeks of its stay on the Gulf Coast, had the Nats encountered poor weather in Biloxi. The Mississippi city, however, gave the Nats no cash guarantee.

Giants Capture 2 From Cincinnati

Schumacher Pitches 4-Hit Ball for Victory.

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 13.—The Giants pulled the "Hal Schumacher trick"—which is becoming a bit time worn—on the Cincinnati Reds to win a doubleheader, 7 to 2 and 9 to 1, and gain the lead in their series.

Manager Bill Terry tossed Schumacher in against his favorite victims in the first encounter and the big St. Lawrence University graduate pitched four-hit ball for his fourteenth major league triumph over the Reds without a loss. Roy Parmelee followed Hal and did just about as well, granting only six blows for his eighth victory of the year.

Buc Streak Halted; Lose to Brooklyn

By the Associated Press.

Brooklyn June 13.—The Dodgers shattered Pittsburgh's five-game winning streak today when Darrell (Cy) Blanton, freshman right hander, weakened in the eighth inning of a strike-out duel with Van Mungo and was beaten, 3 to 0.

Blanton was allowed only one hit before the series of explosions started with one out. Len Koenecke and Joe Stripp hit successive singles and Al Lopez doubled to drive in one run. Mungo knocked in the other two and the rally ended in a "goofy" double play. Ralph Boyle bunted and kept on running as the Pirates waited for the ball to roll foul. He caught up with Mungo at second and both were tagged out in the ensuing rundown.

Report Takes Upperville Trophy

Bayly Gelding Captures Challenge Bowl at Horse Show.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

UPPERVILLE, Va., June 13.—Report, Roger Bayly's handsome chestnut gelding, by Repulse-Primrose, captured the challenge bowl offered in the class for registered half-bred 3-year-olds, which was a feature of the program on the opening day of the forty-fifth annual exhibition of the Upperville Colt and Horse Show held at Grafton Farm, near Upperville. The bowl, a new trophy offered by the association, must be won three times before it can be kept permanently. Last year Peach Strothers, of Upperville, became the permanent winners of the trophy in this class.

Bayly, also an Upperville horseman, won over E. L. Redmon's Lucille and Going Up, both splendid half-breeds, which placed second and third, respectively.

Weather Ideal.

Bayly's Report also captured first place in the class for 3-year-old hunters, in which 28 entries were listed. A crowd of several thousand, including a number of Washington society people, gathered on the show grounds, considered the prettiest in America, to witness horses from Virginia's famed hunting country put on some excellent performances. People here saw classes well filled, competition keen and

Stock Buyers Seek Equities With Dividends

Trading Loiters; Senate Extension of NRA Is Ignored.

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 13.—Aside from a mild recovery in some of the utilities after yesterday's battering, the stock market gave a rather stodgy performance today.

Volume fell well below the million-share mark, and many leaders finished with prices even on balance. Grains got most of the speculative attention, while a good bit of the demand in the share market appeared to be a continuance of the steady search for income producers.

Speculation on this subject obscured the enactment in the Senate of the NRA extension bill, which created scarcely a stir in Wall Street. The modified NRA was generally seen as of little significance to business at the moment.

With some brokerage and investment counsel quarters sounding a temperate warning note regarding the effect of seasonal and technical factors and political developments on the market, caution in making new commitments was more in evidence. The day's turnover was 930,940 shares. The Associated Press average of 60 stocks advanced .2 of a point to 43.5.

A distinctly hopeful development for the longer term, however, which was being cited in many quarters, was the rising tide of debt refunding which now promises to make June a banner month in this respect.

Cotton Closes In Mild Rally

Market Is Unchanged to 4 Points Higher in Quiet Session.

By the United Press.

New York, June 13.—Early slight declines were followed by moderate rallies in a generally quiet and irregular cotton market today. Lower cables and easier wheat brought in offerings, but less favorable weather in the Western belt caused covering. The market closed net unchanged to four points higher.

Fluctuations were over a range of 6 to 12 points. Morning declines under Liverpool selling and scattering liquidation caused net losses of 5 to 7 points, but trade and spot houses absorbed July offerings when the premium of that position narrowed to 30 points over October.

Following recent liquidation contracts became less plentiful and prices rallied to net gains of 1 to 4 points on covering during the middle of the afternoon.

General rains in Texas and portions of adjacent States were considered unfavorable but traders were disinclined to make fresh commitments while awaiting developments at Washington.

Former City Bank Head Gets First Big Job Since Resignation.

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 13.—Postal Telegraph & Cable Co., harrassed by recurrent deficits, has sought the advice of Charles E. Mitchell, fiery erstwhile chief of the National City Bank. This is Mitchell's first big job since he returned to Wall street in January, taking a suite of offices marked "C. E. Mitchell, Inc." He resigned from the National City Bank in February, 1933.

Mitchell is familiar with the affairs of the Postal Telegraph & Cable Corporation, through having served for some time up until two years ago as a director of International Telephone & Telegraph Corporation, the parent company. It was explained, however, that his new connection with the Postal is purely in an advisory capacity on a retainer basis, and that he does not occupy any official position.

The problems of the Postal will be discussed at a meeting of directors, slated for tomorrow. Postal's immediate problem is the payment of interest due on some $50,000,0000 of 5 per cent bonds July 1. Postal has been looking to the parent company for aid for some time. The question is understood to have arisen in International Telephone & Telegraph Corporation circles as to whether it should continue to pay the deficits of Postal, or whether Postal should seek a capital readjustment to reduce its fixed charges.

Hupp Faction Wins Legal Point in Fight

Detroit, June 13 (AP).—Federal Judge Edward J. Moinet granted a temporary injunction today restraining Archie M. Andrews, former chairman of the Hupp Motor Car Co. board of directors, and his old board, from functioning as directors of the company, and from carrying out certain contracts to which J. Walter Drake, another former board chairman, objected. The action indicated that the recent compromise agreement between opposing factions in the company had fallen through.

Reserve City Bankers Will Seek Reversal of Extreme Easy Money Policy, Placing Less Stress Upon Opposing New Banking Legislation.

By a Special Correspondent.

New York, June 13.—The evolution of a practical program for checking current unsound tendencies in American banking was taken up by a group of executives of larger institutions at a little-publicized but very important meeting this week in Manchester, Vt.

In this quiet and out-of-the-way New England town, the Reserve City Bankers' Association convened. Unlike the American Bankers' Association, this organization through the 25 years of its history has almost always avoided the limelight of publicity. However, it has tended in some respects to become considerably more influential in shaping thinking among the Nation's bankers than the more inclusive American Bankers' Association itself.

Several points in this new bankers' program, as brought out in the discussions in Manchester this week, may be set down tentatively as follows:

1. Wherever possible, bankers should follow a conciliatory attitude toward the Government, and avoid a merely negative program of opposition to pending legislation.

Would Stress Administration Rather Than Legislation.

2. Major stress should be placed upon positive reforms in the banking policies being pursued by Administration agencies, rather than upon the wording of statutes before Congress. In particular, efforts should be started immediately to induce the Government to take steps to reduce bank excess reserves and abate the pressure of easy money.

3. The Administration should be asked to abandon efforts to induce commercial banks to buy large additional amounts of long-term Government bonds.

4. A return of interest rates to more normal levels is desirable for economic recovery, as well as sound banking. With reasonable earning power, it is argued, the banks would be more likely to operate along normal lines than now, when many of them are in the red because of abnormally lower interest rates artificially induced by loading up the banks with huge surplus balances.

An influential faction among the Reserve City Bankers Association has urged against public discussion among bankers of leaving the Federal Reserve System. They point out that competent New York attorneys have given opinions that such a step could be counteracted by Federal legislation imposing a punitive tax upon banks doing so, or forcing all banks to take out national charters under the power of Congress to regulate the value of money. An opinion by the chief counsel of the Federal Reserve Board is on record with a similar conclusion. Even more stress is placed upon the likely adverse popular reaction to withdrawal from the Reserve system by large city banks.

By stressing the administration of banking laws and policies, rather than the verbiage in new legislation, it is felt that the banking community can play a more realistic role in the working out of national banking policies. In particular, stress is placed upon the fact that holdings of Federal Government bonds, including guaranteed obligations, by the commercial banks now amount to almost $12,500,000,000, or 40 per cent of all bank loans and investments. About half of these are long-term bonds, and a future reversal in the trend of interest rates would threaten serious capital lossess to banks holding them.

Would Check Buying of Long-Term Governments.

Apart from this risk of market depreciation of long-term Government bonds, all the more serious because of the fact that abnormally low earning power prevents banks from building up their surplus reserves further, the Reserve City Bankers have considered the wisdom of banks expanding further their holdings of Government bonds. It is coming to be more generally understood by bankers that when they buy Government bonds they increase the total amount of outstanding bank deposits. With their huge excess reserves, therfore, and with the Government deficit continuing, the commercial banks may be called upon to buy several billions of new Government bonds annually. The result would be a progressive further transformation of the commercial banking system of this country into a virtual Government bond investment trust. Unlike investment trusts, however, the commercial banks are in the position of having their liabilities in the form of demand and time deposits, payable immediately or on short notice.

The Reserve City Bankers' Association is pledged to a program of returning to accepted sound principles of banking, so as to make deposit insurance and other untried and doubtful measures for preventing a recurrence of bank failures unnecessary. It is already on record as favoring unification of the banking system and an extension of branch banking so as to increase the average size and strength of individual banking institutions. Many of its members also favor a policy of reconciliation with the Administration as far as feasible. At the same time, recent developments in banking have caused growing concern among them, and it is felt that the time has come to urge the Administration, in the interests of sound banking, to moderate its policy of extremely easy money, to bring about an early reduction of excess reserves and to seek a market for a larger proportion of future increases in the national debt outside the commercial banks.

First Liberty Loan Deadline Is Tomorrow

$1,611,000,000 Has Been Exchanged for New Treasury Issues.

By R. Karl von Lewinski.

The final deadline on all First Liberty Bonds is tomorrow, the Treasury announced yesterday and interest on $322,000,000 of the war loan that has not been redeemed, will cease at that time.

Holders of $1,611,000,000 of the bonds have taken advantage of the exchange privileges and traded the called issues for Treasury notes series A of 1940 or Treasury bonds of 1955-60. The remaining $322,000,000 in loans will be redeemed for cash, either at the Treasury or through local banks.

Treasury officials announced also that more than $100,000,000 of the Fourth Liberty Bonds that have been called during the past year, have not been turned in. Tardy holders of this loan alone are losing more than $4,000,000 in interest every year.

Washington banks, in a last minute endeavor to inform all bond owners of the call have been sponsoring a cooperative advertising campaign. In order to forestall any possible loss all holders are urged to make new interest bearing investments as soon as possible.

An incident occurring in a local bank yesterday showed that, despite many efforts to apprise Liberty holders of the call, many are as yet unaware of it. A depositor, while cashing coupons of a $10,000 bond, was told that the issue had expired. "How can this be possible?" he asserted, greatly astonished. "There are still a lot of coupons left."

Treasury officials estimated, by the returns from former calls, that approximately $200,000,000 would not be turned in immediately, but would dribble in over a period of years. They stated that, although a great part had undoubtedly been lost or destroyed, many of the securities are being hoarded and will not see the light of day for many years to come.

The local club will be represented on the links by George Ferris, Corcoran Thom, jr., Haywood Newbold, Jasper DuBose, Richard Dunn and Thomas C. Montgomery. Carl Kurtz, vice president; James Nolan, past president; Y. E. Booker, Myles Quail and James M. Johnston will also attend.

Weekly Food Index Shows 1-Cent Decline

New York, June 13 (AP).—The weekly food index compiled by Dun & Bradstreet is off 1 cent to $2.59 for the period ended June 11, thus continuing the irregular decline of the past few months.

The current figure compares with the January 1 index of $2.58, which marks the low point for this year to date. The high of $2.76 was registered on February 12.

Bank Clearings Rise $51,318,000 in Week

New York, June 13 (AP). — Bank clearings for the week ended June 12 amounted to $4,776,778,000 against $4,599,382,000 in the corresponding week last year, Dun & Bradstreet reported today. The volume exceeded the previous week, in which there was a holiday, by $51,318,000.

The figures were substantially higher at most of the leading cities of the West and South. The total for New York City, $3,116,783,000, was slightly behind last year, while the aggregate for other centers was 12 per cent higher at $1,659,995,000.

Chicago clearings amounted to $245,506,000 against $221,300,000 last year.

Ft. Worth Group Buys Gulf States Life Co.

Dallas, Tex., June 13 (AP).—Purchase of a controlling interest in the Gulf States Security Life Insurance Co. by A. Morgan Duke, of Fort Worth, and associates was announced today at the offices of the company. The Trinity Life Insurance Co. of Fort Worth will be merged with the Gulf States Co., the announcement said. Duke has been elected president of Gulf States to succeed Z. E. Marvin, sr., resigned.

The enlarged company will have in force approximately $60,000,000 of insurance. Its total assets will be about $3,500,000.

Foreign Markets.

London, June 13 (AP). — Week-end settlements occupied most of the traders' attention on the stock exchange today. Iron and steel shares were supported despite speculative profit-taking. Transatlantic shares and gilt-edged securities remained steady, while Japanese and Chinese issues were weak, awaiting Far Eastern developments. Gold mines eased. The closing tone was steady.

Paris—Traders were hesitant in a quiet session on the bourse today. Internationals and French industrial shares made slight gains. Rentes dropped fractionally except the 3 per cent issue, which showed a fraction of a point gain. The market closed irregular.

Berlin—Small business on the boerse caused prices to weaken and the closing was unsettled.

Standard Power Output Up.

Chicago, June 13.—Electric output of Standard Gas & Electric Co. for the week ended June 8, 1935, totaled 83,927,396 kilowatt-hours, an increase of 2.3 per cent compared with the corresponding week last year.

Kansas Yields Shatter Wheat Prices in Pit

Closing Is at New Low, 23 Cents Below Top Mark in April.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, June 13.—Breaking of season low-price records became general in the grain markets today, coincident with reports of Kansas wheat harvest yields better than expected.

Persistent liquidating sales by holders, together with improvement of domestic crop prospects, and with nervousness regarding disposal of the Canadian wheat surplus, were notable bearish factors. Acute weakness of the Minneapolis wheat market had especially a disturbing influenee.

Wheat in Chicago closed weak at about the day's bottom level, 1½@2¼ cents under yesterday's finish, July 78⅞@79, corn 1¼@1¾ off, July 79⅛@79¼, oats ⅜@⅝ down, and provisions unchanged to a setback of 15 cents.

Numerous stop-loss orders resulting from impairment of traders' margins were forced into execution by the tumble of prices. Wheat fell to 23 cents below high points reached in April, when drought and inflation talk were a stimulus to buyers.

New crop domestic wheat prospects were reported as almost everywhere auspicious, with only casual complaints coming in from central and soft wheat territory, which will be ready for harvest in another three weeks or so.

Corn, oats, rye and barley all gave way, owing to sympathy with wheat weakness.

Premier Bonds Hold Market On Even Keel

Utilities Are Steady in Face of Fears About Legislation.

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 13.—The bond market, as a whole, found little in the news today to disturb it unduly and the majority of listed issues ended a little better than even.

While there were scattered soft spots in evidence, the steady undertone of leading loans was exemplified by the Associated Press averages of selected rails, utilities and industrials, each of which finished the session with a gain of .1 of a point.

Neither buyers nor sellers were especially enthusiastic, however, and transfers totaled only $10,244,000, par value, against $14,481,000 in the preceding day's dealings.

Most of the utilities held fairly well in the face of fears that the House would follow the Senate in putting through the Wheeler-Rayburn holding company bill with "teeth" in it. At the same time, followers of the power and light securities pointed out that, even if the measure which the corporations dislike becomes law, there is still a chance that the Supreme Court may treat it the same as the NRA.

Utility bonds about even to moderately higher included American Water Works 6s at 80½, Columbia Gas 5s at 86, Laclede Gas 5½s at 66¼ and Consolidated Gas 5½s at 105¾.

Treasury Gold Over 9 Billions

Increases $100,000,000 in Week to Highest Total in History.

By the Associated Press.

Monetary gold stock of the United States passed the $9,000,000,000 mark for the first time in history during the week ended June 12, the Federal Reserve Board reported yesterday in its weekly condition statement of the regional banks. An increase of an even $100,000,000 for the week brought the total to $9,016,000,000.

The total was $20,000,000 higher than the latest reported figure, contained in today's Treasury statement as of June 11, which gave total gold assets as $8,970,357,298. As a result, the gold base of the country now stands at $1,196,000,000 higher than in the comparable period of last year.

The gold influx caused member bank reserve balances to climb above the $5,000,000,000 mark, an increase of $135,000,000 during the week, bringing the total to $5,049,000,000, an amount considerably more than $2,000,000,000 in excess of legal requirements.

Latona and M'Elvenny Bow in Upsets

Lynch, Shore Surprise Winners

Join Mitchell, Markey in Semifinals; Fish and Partner Triumph.

ACCOMPANIED by three major upsets and the thunderous doubles advance of Herculean Hamilton Fish, tennis-playing Congressman from New York, the annual City of Washington tournament advanced to the singles semi-finals and approached the doubles quarter-finals yesterday.

Hugh Lynch, former Princeton tennis captain, scored the first big unexpected triumph when he virtually rocked the top-flight ranks from stem to stern with a 7—5, victory over the No. 1 seeded Tony Latona, second ranking player of the District.

In another upset of nearly the same proportions, Frank Shore, of the North Carolina University tennis team, turned back Ralph McElvenny, No. 3 seeded player, 6—3, 6—2, 12—10. Shore is ranked No. 9 in the District, and McElvenny, No. 4.

Fish-Breese Advance.

Representative Fish and left-handed William Breese, former Harvard tennis captain, gave the doubles tournament a rather stunning send-off by eliminating the No. 3 seeded team of Shore and Rickey Willis, another North Carolina U. veteran, 2—6, 3—6, 6—4.

No longer slim, and past their twenties, Fish and Breese then took on their second opponents of the day, young Ray Stocklinski and Kahl Spriggs, experienced Public Parks League team, just missing admission into the quarter-final select group. Darkness intervened with the conflict raging at 12—10, 8—8 in favor of the former Harvard duo. It will be continued this morning on the Monument courts.

Upholding the reputation of the seeded list to at least some extent, Dooley Mitchell, the defending champion, seeded No. 2, and Bud Markey, seeded No. 4, sailed into the semi-finals with straight-set victories. Mitchell eliminated Willis 9—7, 6—2, and Markey ousted Ray Blade, who, the day previous, had put out Pat Deck, seeded No. 8. The scores were 6—1, 6—4.

The Lynch victory over Latona came as the first big upset of the local tennis season. It saw Latona open by taking a 5—2 lead and then lose the next ten games as his back-hand faltered all too often. Lynch was quick to take advantage of the opportunity, pounding his rival's back-hand in deep court steadily and gradually forcing him to beat himself.

Shore in Uphill Fight.

Shore's victory was an even more uphill fight. In the vital third set, McElvenny rushed to a 3—1 lead before the collegian stemmed his attack and himself took a 4—3 lead. McElvenny came back to lead 5—4 and again led at 8—7, but at no time had set-point. Shore finally broke his service in the twenty-second game after 30-all, winning the match with a fast forehand passing shot as McElvenny, a highly able volleyer, came to the net.

Mitchell trailed 3—4 and 4—5 in the first set of his match with Willis, but out-steadied the younger player, concentrating on his sometimes vulnerable forehand rather than on his strong stroke off the left side.

One semi-final will be played today, Lynch meeting Markey at 5 o'clock. Mitchell will play Shore tomorrow at 2 p. m.

In the District Junior championships, Harry March and Allie Rittenberg, No. 3 and 2 seeded players, respectively, advanced to the semi-finals with straight-set triumphs.

Braddock Whips Baer for Crown

Braddock—but heavier punches were more effective.

Because he was not Baer's equal when the two were locked together, Braddock did not let the Livermore lover get to his midsection until all the fire and steam had left the king who was being uncrowned. Then he stood toe-to-toe, swapping wallop for wallop and usually coming out the winner in the exchanges.

Baer landed many a hard blow in the body and many a pretty good left hook to the head—but pretty good was ont nearly good enough against the inspired Irishman.

Maxie announced that his poor showing was due to broken hands suffered in the fifth round. His hands were in poor shape before the bout. Whether his hands caused his downfall is problematical.

16 Crews Are Busy In Regatta Practice

By the Associated Press.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., June 13.—Washington Navy [illegible] waited until the cool of the evening today before staging one [illegible] preparation for the intercollegiate regatta Tuesday.

The three workouts, conducted both before and after the change of tide, were made under adverse conditions but nevertheless proved satisfactory to the respective coaches. They climaxed a day of great activity which saw the 16 crews boiling in a hot son.

Coach Buck Walsh pulled the surprise of the day by sending his newly arrived Navy varsity down the 4-mile course in 21 minutes 42 seconds, while Washington and Cornell rowed upstream after the change of tide. Washington's time was estimated at 21 minutes 20 seconds. Cornell's was believed to be well under 22 minutes.

Hensler Tops Pinmen.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Martinsburg, W. Va., June 13.—Final averages for the City Bowling League announced today reveal that Howard Hensler tops for the season with an average of 117.8 pins per game. His nearest opponent was Earl Weller, who had a mark of 116. Other team leaders in the league, Kees, Caskey, Crowl and Dorkeney, followed in the order named.

Tennis Tips for Troyanovsky

who arranges matches for Washington and Philadelphia. "I'm still trying to find out what authority called off the matches."

"When you gentlemen get through passing the buck, maybe we can get some place," he said.

This statement somewhat irritated the Washington promoters, whereupon Mr. Tilden was tapped on the shoulder with a belligerent forefinger and admonished severely.

"I've had matches ditched for bad weather," Tilden continued, "but this is the first time I ever had one ditched in good weather."

In a private conference, Messrs. Fried and Fishman prevailed upon Tilden to either play today or go unpaid. In order to keep to the statement which had been broadcast over the radio that he was going through with the original contract Tilden also was persuaded to play yesterday's matches.

After repeated urgings and inquiries from Messrs. Fried and Fishman as to "why doncha get goin'," Tilden finally donned his tennis clothes. As he strolled out on the court, he quickly spied that the net was minus a center strap.

"For heaven's sake," he said, "haven't they got a center strap around this place besides a hunk of string."

In the confusion before the match, somebody asked Tilden where Plaa was.

"Oh, he's sitting over there in a state of coma, I guess," Tilden answered.

Tilden Takes First Set.

Tilden won the first set after trailing at 4—5, deucing the set with a nice drop shot and a smash. He took his service for 6—5 and then took the chapter after losing the first two points of the last game as he forced Plaa into several errors.

In the second set, Tilden complained that the score had been kept erroneously and then said: "It's too late to do anything about it now." At a crucial point in the second set when Plaa led 5—4, Tilden pointed out to the officials that one of Plaa's serves, was "out by a foot."

"Out by one complete foot," he exclaimed pounding the ground with his racquet.

Tilden pulled up to 4—4 in the deciding set from 4—1, but his aging legs apparently felt the effects. Plaa engaged the Great One in long rallies, running him from one side to another, Tilden often making impossible gets. In the last two games, it was Tilden's errors, coming from almost sheer weariness which gave Plaa the match.

In the doubles, Plaa and Bob Ramsmillion, young French trick shot expert, defeated Tilden and Al Chapin, former first-ten ranker, 6—2, 6—1. Ramillion defeated Chapin, 6—0, in an abbreviated singles' engagement.

Gichner Iron Works Team In Stride

New Pitchers Scheduled to Make Appearance in Title Tilt.

THE Gichner Iron Works Team, which seems to have hit its stride, will display its wares tomorrow against the strong Rockville Club on the latter's field. The game will be called at 3 o'clock. Henry Gichner, the 220-pound catcher and manager, has been hustling around during the past few weeks signing up several new pitchers, upon whom he is counting to carry the Iron Workers to The Post Association title in the Industrial league.

Several players, especially a pitcher, are sought by Manager Ed Blades, of the Takoma Tigers, to bolster the strength of his team for the remainder of the season. Those interested are requested to attend the practice sessions of the Tigers on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays on the diamond at Blair road and Peabody street. For games with the Takomas call Georgia 5499.

The Lovellsville team is challenged to a double-header on the Fourth of July by Clarendon. Ed Watson is handling the schedule. For games call Clarendon 157, or write 1 Cherrydale avenue.

Following its impressive win over the CCC A-2 Club, the Bell Cab nine is on the lookout for more games in the unlimited class, particularly out-of-town teams. Write Manager F. A. Sullivan at 326 North Carolina avenue southeast.

The Majestic Radio tossers will visit Frederick, Md., Sunday for a double-header with the Frederick Hustlers, 1934 champs of the Blue Ridge League. The following Majestic players are requested to report at 9:30 Sunday morning at Tenth and H streets northwest: Campbell, Oertel, Wynne, McBride, Benner, McGeever, Williams, Fox, Payne, De Angelis and Johnson.

All Ex-Convicts Represented By Pitts

scared as hell, but after a while people were knocked off so often a dead body meant nothing unusual. The only fun we ever had was playing baseball near the docks, but the landlords had the cops chase us off.

"When I was 18 years old I tried to join an athletic club, but could not pay the dues at the Y. M. C. A., so I joined my neighborhood club. What one learns in a neighborhood social club would take ten years to learn on the outside. Your friends are gunmen and 'cokeys,' and if you don't pal with them, you just aren't regular, so I did and wound up in the 'stir.' What's the use of giving the name of the 'dive?' I did four years there, and while up there met some real social workers who seemed pretty regular. They spoke to me of environment and background; of rotten systems and crowded city streets where crime was breeding. They painted a different picture of the outside world and had me believe that there are breaks for straight men who looked for and wanted them. They built inspirations and phony hopes and pictures in my mind. When my time was up I left to conquer the world. You know the old story • • • no one wanted an ex-convict. 'Sorry, but we can't use you.' No new friends to make. It didn't take long for the social workers' lying pictures to fade. Today I'm back in the 'club' again with friends that listen, understand and sympathize but can not help."

Later in his letter, the unknown ex-convict asks: "Did the judge ever feel hungry? Did he have lots and back yards as his playgrounds? Did he live among the starved and cold and poor? Was he ever unable to pay for a doctor? And did he ever get up from out of the gutter and ask for a chance to live and become a useful citizen? I don't want to be a sob sister, but, Paul, I hope you publish this in your column to ask all your many readers to write the 'judge' and make him admit he is wrong. And I hope I may see the time when our fellow men will extend a helping hand to our unfortunate brothers who need our help."

The temptation to be what ex-convict calls a sob sister is obvious and is to be avoided. Society is entitled to protection from its enemies. But, at the same time, it seems to me that society's methods of dealing with the criminal are based on fear and revenge, and chiefly fear. It is an old, old line of reasoning, and perhaps that is what is the matter with it. A coward who shoots and kills an unarmed man for profit is hardly an object worthy of public sympathy. Society kills him or locks him up where he can do no further mischief. But what society really seems to fear most is to look back of the life of the man who is an outlaw and learn what makes him a wild beast, and whether there is any chance of turning him into a useful citizen.

Round-by-Round Fight Details

jaw, but took two right uppercuts. Baer rifled Braddock's head with a half dozen rights, but Jim stabbed right back at him with lefts, then flung a hard right to the chin. Again, as they came in close, Baer lifted a half dozen short vicious uppercuts to the head before the bell rang. It was Baer's round.

ROUND EIGHT.

Baer rocked Braddock's head with three short right uppercuts. Braddock backed away and as Baer followed the challenger whipped a terrific right to the head. Baer put on his clowning act as the crowd roared. Braddock pumped two lefts and two rights to the head as Baer backed into a corner. Braddock nailed the champion with two lefts and two rights to the head. A long right bounced off Braddock's jaw and two right uppercuts shot Jimmy's head back. Baer stalked Jimmy with his right poised, but Braddock laced a right to the champion's chin and they were slugging evenly in midring as the bell sounded. It was an even round.

ROUND NINE.

Braddock stabbed Baer's head with lefts as the champion was low with his right. Baer aimed a half dozen left hooks at Braddock's body and one fell very low, drawing another warning from the referee. Braddock pounded Baer's body and the champion seemed so remorseful he made little effort to punch back. Braddock leaned into him, and they hammered both hands to the body. As Baer followed the challenger, Braddock nailed him twice with long lefts and rights to the head and Jimmy had to take a half dozen more stiff right uppercuts. Braddock hammered two long rights to the head and they laid on each other in close again punching ceaselessly to the head and body. It was Braddock's round again because of low punches.

ROUND TEN.

Baer stormed into the challenger trying to nail him with his long right. Braddock met him with a right that damaged the champion's right eye. Braddock half turned Max around with a long right to the ear. Plodding methodically along, Jim hammered both hands to the body, but took three stunning left hooks on the chin. Baer again whipped into the challenger with both hands, then stopped, dropped his fist and laughed as though he had no liking for the business. They posed slowly at long range. Braddock shot a right to the body, but took three hard rights to the ribs, and two more to the head, as the bell sounded. It was Baer's round.

ROUND ELEVEN.

Braddock pumped lefts to the head. Max drove two long rights to the body and smashed the challenger fiercely about the head with both hands. Baer tried to throw the challenger through the ropes and drew another warning from McAvoy and the booing reproof of the crowd. Max tried desperately to measure Braddock with a long right, but couldn't find an opening. Max laughed, as he held his right hand poised when Braddock's back was half turned, but Jimmy swapped rights to the body with him and never changed his expression as a half dozen right uppercuts bounced from his chin. Baer was ripping right uppercuts to the chin as the bell rang. Baer's round.

ROUND TWELVE.

Braddock met Baer three-quarters of the way across the ring and drove a right to the body, then a fine left hook and right-cross to the head. Braddock stabbed Baer's head with a left and drummed another right, then a left hook on the champion's chin. Braddock whipped both hands into the champion's head, took Baer's furious return assault, and slugged evenly with the champion as they hammered each other along the ropes. Braddock swung a long left and two rights to the head; Baer drummed two rights to the body. Baer grinned as Braddock pinned him on the ropes and hammered his head and body with both hands. They slugged furiously in a corner and Baer tore Braddock's body with a half dozen long rights. They slugged furiously past the bell and the ring was in an uproar as Referee McAvoy separated them. Referee McAvoy took the round away from Baer for fouling.

ROUND THIRTEEN.

ROUND FOURTEEN.

Braddock walked in with his long left, but Baer drilled both hands to the body. Baer punched furiously at the challenger's head with both hands, but Jimmy stood flat-footedly and slugged with him and Max was first to draw away. Braddock stabbed twice into the middle of Baer's face, but took a half dozen terrific right swings that reddened his side. Braddock threw two terrific rights into the champion's head. Braddock jumped in and the champion held, then ripped a right uppercut to the Irishman's jaw. Braddock took a fierce right on the side, but Jimmy flung a long right to the head before they stood and cuffed each other, both very tired now, in a clinch up to the bell. It was Baer's round by a narrow margin.

ROUND FIFTEEN.

They shook hands and Braddock stabbed the champion's head with a left, then locked in close in a body-smashing duel. Braddock backed away, looped a left hook to the head and stepped back in to hold as Baer hammered furiously on the challenger's body. They were wrestling in close, slugging wearily to the body. Madly Baer sought an opening for his right, but the best he could do was drum the challenger's side and then rip his head with a half dozen right uppercuts. They leaned in close again and Braddock shot a hard right to the head.

Desperately Baer threw everything he had in a mad assault on the challenger, but Jimmy stood like a rock and slugged back with everything he had. They were standing there punching as the final bell rang. It was Baer's round.

By H. I. Phillips

Gene Sarazen Tells All.

("Sam Parks, jr., new Open golf champion, took his first lessons from Gene Sarazen."—News item.)

Don't talk to me, boys! I am weary;
I seldom have felt quite so low;
I've taken my luck as I've found it—
You know how those breaks always go.
But now mine's the ultimate horror—
The pay-off, the punishing punch:
A kid whom I taught his first golf strokes
Has licked me and all of the bunch!

II.

Excuse me, old pal, if I'm crabby—
I don't mean to be so, of course;
But this year's engagement at Oakmont
Has filled me with deepest remorse;
With scores of the world's greatest golfers
Three days o'er the fairways I fought
And who do you think won the Open? . . .
A nice little boy whom I taught!

III.

I never felt more like a winner—
My game seemed to be at the top;
I hastened to Oakmont quite blithely
And felt I'd a swell chance to cop.
My game wasn't just what I hoped for
But this is what saddens me more:
The winner was just a young fellow
I'd shown how to cut down a score!

IV.

"Do you hold it like this?" he had asked me . . .
"Could you show me the orthodox stance? . . .
Is my left foot or right foot brought forward? . . .
Should my hands brush the side of my pants? . . .
I had told him the best I was able,
I had emphasized form, swing and mood,
But to have him beat me in the Open . . .
Now I ask you, is that gratitude?

V.

I had schooled him in keeping his head down,
(But I lifted my own, it appears);
"Keep your eye on the ball," I had cautioned
(But I didn't keep mine there, my dears!)
"Will I ever be good?" he had asked me;
"You may play fair in time," I'd replied . . .
Well, the way that he played down at Oakmont
Will disprove any charge that I lied.

VI.

Sammie Parks? . . . Why, I taught him at Pittsburgh
And I showed him the grip and the swing;
He was slow, he was wild, he was awful . . .
But now look at the jolly young thing!
Oh, a warning to pros who give lessons,
And a tip to you pro writers, too:
Let the story of me and my pupil
Be a terrible warning to you!

The Perfect Alibi.

No matter what happens to a New Dealer he can always say it just wasn't in the cards.

Hikers to See Biological Bogs On Sunday Trip

Orchids and Insect-Eating Plants to Be Seen in Powdermill Bog.

By Robert Shosteck.

On Sunday the Wanderbirds will visit the Powdermill Bogs, a biological wonderland where numerous varieties of insect-eating plants, rare orchids, jumping mice and thumb-nail frogs are all commonplace, and ferns grow to gigantic proportions. Also on the itinerary is a fine swimming pool near Devil's Den, not for from the end of the hike. For scenic effects, too, the gorge of Paint Branch is comparable to Northwest Branch with which the hikers are more familiar.

Club members and readers of The Post plannig to go on this 6-mile hike will meet in front of The Post Building at 9:45 a. m. The round trip fare will be 40 cents and reservations must be made in advance at National 4200. Buses will take the hikers directly to the bog near the intersection of Riggs road and Paint Branch School road. Bring lunch and a cup for water; a canteen is likewise advisable since the springs are far between.

Route of Hike

Plant Traps Bugs.

The Powdermill Bogs, now a wildflower preserve, are located a short distance from the bridge over Paint Branch and are the home of many of our most beautiful orchids. Such striking varieties as the rose pogonia, ladies tresses and habenaria are found here. One of the rarest of herbs about Washington, the pitcher plant, has been successfully introduced into this area. This plant has tubular leaves the inner surfaces of which are covered with stiff hairs, pointing downward. Insects in search of nectar are attracted to these leaves. Finding themselves trapped in, they vainly attempt to escape, only to perish at the bottom and be absorbed by the plant. The pitcher plant slowly digests its victim over a period of a week or more, only the hard outer shell of the insect remaining unconsumed. Old leaves of this plant often contain the skeletons of dozens of insects which were lured to this ingenious trap.

Another insect-eater, the sundew, of which three varieties are found in this bog, captures its prey in a different manner. This bog plant bears long nectar-tipped hairs upon the flat leaf surface. These hairs are very sensitive and quickly fold over and pin down the insect which alights upon it in search of sweets. The hapless fly or bug is then slowly absorbed by the leaf. These nature dramas will be witnessed on Sunday's trip and should be fascinating subjects for the skilled photographer. Hikers are warned that it is absolutely forbidden to remove any plants from these bogs.

Since these interesting orchids and insect eaters grow in about six inches of water, hikers should be prepared with waterproof shoes or else bring along a change of footgear. It is also feasible to go barefoot, since the thick sphagnum moss offers comfortable footing.

From the bog the group will proceed by bus along the dirt road for one mile to the Paint Branch Bridge, at which point the 3½-mile hike to Devil's Den begins. This scenic rock and shelter lies along a branch of the run, just above the swimming pool. The Columbia road, where the buses will await the group, is but one mile from the pool.

Hikers who have a tendency to stray off the trail will welcome the news that a thousand paper arrows will be printed and placed on strategic trees and rocks along hike routes. The July-August summer calendar is now being prepared and hikers who are interested in suggesting new trips or leading hikes should send in their suggestions to the writer.

The annual picnic of the Red Triangle Outing Club will be held at the clubhouse on Sunday afternoon and evening. The program includes a supper, games and a dance and the boys will be the hosts on this occasion. The clubhouse is reached via a dirt road under the canal near New Cut and Canal roads.

Copies of the "Forest Trees of D. C." illustrated are still available for hikers interested in making the acquaintance of local trees. This valuable handbook may be purchased on the hikes for 20 cents or will be sent by mail on receipt of 25 cents.
